—We acknowledge the receipt of a sample of the flour now being made at the Garrett mill. It is extra nice, and if the proprietor can keep his flour up to its present standard he will be deservedly popular with all the good house wives in that section of the country.

—A. C. Cobler is ahead by several counts. He made a deposit in the COURIER bank Saturday of a rutabaga weighing over thirteen pounds. We stood it up far enough away so it should not fall down on the safe and smash it. It can be seen at our office for a few days, after which we shall cut it up and cook it, a section at a time.

HUDSON, IND., November 7, 1882.

On Saturday, Oct. 28, Barbara Heckathorn of this village was stricken down by lightning. She lay during the following night, Sunday and until Monday, in an unconscious state. She is now slowly recovering. A few years ago her father was instantly killed by lightning. M.

—Miss Frank Clark, who was a teacher in the public schools here and at Waterloo a few years ago, is now in town visiting her relatives, the family of W. A. Clark. She has been in the mountains of the far west in the Gunnison mining district for about two years for the sake of her health. She returns greatly improved by the pure mountain air, and looking quite well.

—Our friend T. H. Shoub, son of Commissioner Shoub, and recently cashier of the bank in Butler, is now located in Kansas City, Mo., where he is bookeeper for W. W. Egnew, general agent for the Domestic Sewing Machine Co. Mr. Shoub is well known here as a reliable and capable business man who has been unusually successful for one of his age. We extend him our hand over the long distance and wish him success.

—The one syllable address which Hon. A. P. Edgerton delivered before the graduating school at Fort Wayne last spring, has been published in more than sixty papers. These are widely scattered over the country from Maine to Texas, and even on the Pacific coast. It was published at Vancouver, Washington Territory, and at Portland, Oregon. The address can be had in pamphlet form free by addressing Mr. Edgerton, at Fort Wayne. It ought to be in the hands of every teacher.

DIED.—Near Cedar Creek, DeKalb county, Ind, Rebecca Simon, daughter of Peter Simon, deceased, aged 40 years, 1 month and 23 days. Her sickness was brief, during which time, however, she suffered much. She was highly esteemed and loved by all who knew her. She was a zealous and active member of the St. Johns Evangelical Lutheran church, near Cedar Creek, and her life and faith in the church were exemplary. Her funeral services took place Oct. 30th at Cedar Chapel, on which occasion her former pastor, Rev. Geo. A. Harter, of Goshen, addressed words of comfort, based on John 14, 1-3, to a very large audience.

For a good hat go to Boyer & Beidler, they sell cheap, at Waterloo.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WATERLOO.

'Squire Long and Ed. were in town Tuesday looking as farmer-like as you please. We understand that they are prospering nicely.

Brand & Duncan are chock full of groceries and produce, and nothing makes them so happy as to wrap up goods for their numerous customers.

E. P. Dickinson was home Tuesday to cast his first vote, and went off smiling to resume work on the road.

Four new dwellings on the south side are nearly completed: Oscar L. Young, George Boots, Jeff. Boyles, and Jacob Ginder.

Ere this appears in print the election will be over and some will rejoice and others mourn—for the money idly thrown away. Many will know how much dependence there is in political promises. The mass will be glad that the play is over, and that they can retire from the political theatre and assume the usual avocations of life.

Corn is selling on our streets as low as 35 cents.

COMESKEY'S CORNERS.

Fine weather with cool, frosty nights.

Health is good in this vicinity.

Singing school every Friday night at No. 7 school house. Quite a number of scholars in attendance. Mr. Hines teacher.

The county ditch on C. Comesky's land is progressing, through the instrumentality of I. Donaldson.

Corn is being rapidly gathered, and there seems to be an abundance.

Wheat crop looks prosperous in this community.

Some of the boys took it in their heads to steal chickens on Egypt street. Look out boys or you will get cooped.

Charles Comesky took a flying trip to Chicago last week.

A goodly number of ladies of this vicinity assembled at the house of Mrs. I. Ferguson and joyfully surprised her, it being her 60th birthday. Quite anumber of presents were brought and after presenting her with these gifts, a bountiful table was spread and filled with delicious food, from which all partook with thanks and wishes that this amiable lady might live long and enjoy many such birthday surprises. A Puzzled Dutchman Made Glad.

A Dutchman once heard a sermon by a preacher who did not believe in immersion for baptism. In his discourse he attempted to explain the proposition "into," asserting that it means simply going down to or near the water, and being sprinkled. At the close of this very labored discourse, the preacher gave an opportunity for any present to express their thoughts on the subject. The Dutchman accepted the invitation, and remarked as follows:

"Mr. Breacher, I ish so glad I vash here to-night, for I has had explained to my mint something dat I never could believe pefore. Oh, I ish so glad dat into does not mean into at all, but shush close py or near to, for now I can pelieve manish things vot I could not understand pefore. We reat, Mr. Breacher, dat Taniel was cast into de ten of lions, and came out alife! Now, I never could understand dat, for de wilt peasts would eat him up right off; but now it ish very clear to my mint. He was shust close py or near to, and did not get into de ten at all. Oh, I ish so glad I vash here to-night." All this happened in J. C. Henry's nice drug store and had reference to the fine stock of tobaccos and cigars to be found at that popular resort. And all present agreed it was good for them to be there. And they all with one voice cried out. "Oh, I ish so glad I vas here."

County Institute.

The institute that begins next Monday promises to be one of the most valuable and interesting yet held. Among the new and interesting features will be the lectures on physology, by Dr. Russell. He has a valuable set of charts, skeletons, a manikin and other means to illustrate his lectures. No teacher can afford to miss hearing him, as his lectures are worth a whole term of book study. Miss Vineyard, so well known to all our people, will be with us the last three days and on Thursday evening will give one of her brilliant entertainments. Prof. D. D. Luke, of Ligonier, will deliver an interesting lecture Tuesday evening. On Thursday we expect Prof. Brown, of Valparaiso. Don't fail to come to the institute.

L. SHIRMEYER & CO.

No. 27 CALHOUN STREET,

MOTHER EGYPT.

BY JOAQUIN MILLER.

Dark-browed she broods with weary lids
Beside her Sphynx and Pyramids,
With low and never-lifted head.
If she be dead, respect the dead;
If she be weeping, let her weep;
If she be sleeping, let her sleep;
For lo, this woman named the stars!
She suckled at her tawny dugs
Your Moses while you reeked in wars
And prowled your woods, nude, painted thugs.

Then back, brave England, back in peace
To Christian isles of fat increase!
Go back! Else bid your high priests take
Your great bronze Christs and cannon make,
Take down their cross from proud St. Paul's
And coin it into cannon balls!
You tent not far from Nazareth.
Your camp spreads where His child-feet strayed.
If Christ had seen this work of death!
If Christ had seen these ships invade!

I think the patient Christ had said,
"Go back, brave men! Take up your dead;
Draw down your great ships to the seas;
Repass the gates of Hercules.
Go back to wife with babe at breast,
And leave lorn Egypt to her rest."
Is Christ then dead as Egypt is?
Ah, Mother Egypt, torn in twain!
There's something grimly wrong in this—
So like some gray, old woman slain.

What would you have your mother do?
Hath she not done enough for you?
Go back! And when you learn to read
Come read this obelisk. Her deed
L[illegible] der awful forehead is,
In [illegible]ful silence like to this.
What lessons have you raised in stone
To passing nations that shall stand?
[illegible] are to here will leave you lone
And level as yon yellow sand.

St. George, your lions, whence are they?
From awful silent Africa.
This Egypt is the lion's lair;
Beware, young Albion, beware!
I know the very Nile shall rise
To drown you from this sacrifice.
And if the seven plagues should come,
The red seas swallow sword and steed,
Lo! Christian lands stand mute and dumb
To see thy more than Moslem deed.

"BARB."

BY EVELYN S. BAKER.

"He's a regular little barbarian!" we said, sometimes despairingly, "And it's a positive comfort to call him 'Barb,' for short!" For his real name—will it be believed of this poor, helpless mite of ebon humanity?—was Barbarossa Napoleon Bonaparte Smith?

How his mother ever came to hear of such a name always perplexed us. Of course, having heard of it, we did not wonder at the selection; her race have shown a love for high-sounding cognomens. Barb's first appearance among us was in this wise: One gray November afternoon, Lois and I were left alone in the house, mamma having gone out on one of her Good Samaritan errands. The sleet and snow drove sharply against the windows, and the wind whistled a rough defiance to the fire that glowed and crackled. Suddenly the door bell rung a long, loud resonant peal, and I went and opened the door.

There, on the upper step, stood the forlornest little figure artist ever painted! A small apparition, as black as blackness can be, compared with anything but itself! With a jacket and pants that suggested the "rags and jag" of the nursery rhyme—"With shoes like the mouth of a fish;" with a straw hat innocent of brim; with snow powdering his wooly hair; sleet on his curly lashes; snow sifting down his back, and drifting over him and whirling around him. I surveyed him a minute in astonished silence, and he returned my stare with round, shining, unwinking eyes. Then he inquired, composedly, "Is Mrs. Smith at home?" I began to say that he must have mistaken the house, for no such person lived here, when Lois, whom curiosity had attracted to the open doorway, remarked that he might mean our Nancy, whose last name was Smith, though we had scarcely had occasion to recall that fact in the sixteen years she had been in our service. On this suggestion I informed the apparition that Mrs. Smith wasn't at home, and wouldn't be till late in the evening; but I would deliver any message. He displayed a row of astonishingly white teeth in a cheerful grin, stepped in, and first carefully wiping his apologies for shoes, and closing the door decisively: "Oh, if Mrs. Smith lives here, I'm a-going to live here too. She's my gran'mother; I'm Barbarossa Napoleon Bonaparte Smith. I've come to stay, and I'm not goin' away again any more at all!"

Lois and I looked at him and then at each other, and then asked him in. We were soon in possession of the "short and simple annals" of his eleven years. He satisfied us, past a doubt, that he was the child of our Nancy's son, whom she had left behind her in Georgia, when, sixteen years ago, she came north and entered mamma's service. He had enjoyed life fairly well until six months ago his mother died. Seven weeks later his father took another help-meet, who seems to have proved anything but a tender parent to Barb. "She jest made de house too debbie hot to hold me," he said, with expressive emphasis. "Wasn't she a master hand at pinchin' and bangin'—look h-'ere!" and, with a sudden gesture, he rolled his large, loose sleeve up to the shoulder, showing on the thin little arm marks and scars that made tender-hearted Lois cover her face, with a little pitying cry. He had made up his mind, Barb said, not to bear it any longer, and one starlit night, without a penny in the world, and with half a corn cake in his pocket, he said, started off to find the unknown grandmother, "up Norf." How he reached here he himself could hardly tell—by stolen rides on freight cars; by odd jobs on canal boats, by begging a "lift" whenever he found a team bound northward—telling his simple story whenever he could find a listener, he had found his way hither at last, and now sat a living illustration of what perseverance can accomplish, before our sitting-room fire.

Why should I try to tell you how Barb became a regular and settled inmate of our household, when I myself do not know how it came about? Was it because of his own calm assurance that it was so foreordained? Was it because he had the most mischievous eyes and the drollest laugh in the world? We never knew.

But let me have no claim to writing Barbarossa's history for the two years he was with us; for should I attempt such a thing, Gibbon's "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" would be a mere sketch.

But what mischief wasn't that boy guilty of? After overhearing us, one day regretting that our little Scotch terrier's ears should be so prominent, didn't he stick that unfortunate animal's ears close to his head with shoe-maker's wax, and then proudly exhibit him to us, as an instance of the triumph of art over nature? And didn't he bring desolation into Lois's dainty room, in the vain effort to discover a secret panel there? Some street-comrade of his, an ardent reader of dime novels, had related to him a thrilling story, in which secret panels figured largely; and thereafter Barb's sole object in life was to discover such a panel in our old-fashioned house. One day he found that, beside the chimney in Lois's room the paper, upon being tapped, gave forth a hollow sound. Coincidence! So did the paper in the yellow-covered novel! It was the work of a moment for Barb, in his eager certainty of hidden treasure, to run his knife around the paper, lift it up and—oh, me! oh, me! The soot box that hadn't been opened for twenty years! The soot that, in a thick, black cloud, sifted out, settled on the fair white curtains, clung to the counterpane, and made the whole dainty room dingy and soiled and uninhabitable! Barb fled. Before me, on the screen, I see him as he looked that night when we had discovered the disaster, searched for but failed to find him, and were beginning to fear he had run away; and he emerged from the ash-barrel, where he had lain concealed all the afternoon, and stood among us, surely the most wretched figure that was ever seen.

It was after this, but not long, that we began to be troubled about Barb. Often he was gone all day, returning at night unable to give a satisfactory account of himself; often we heard of him in company of boys it were better he should not know. Nancy's threats, Lois's gentleness, mamma's patience, seemed to avail nothing. We had almost made up our minds that Barb must leave us, when, one November afternoon, about two years from the day he had appeared among us, we heard of Barb for the last time. Oh, poor Barb! poor Barb! Down in the crowded streets, he had joined a crowd which a sudden alarm of fire had called together; in his excitement he had not heard the cries which warned him of an engine's being close upon him. There was no time to reign in the galloping horses; no one had been to blame. Oh, poor Barb!

"He's at station B, ma'am," the officer said. "The doctor says it can't be long, for his lungs are hurt bad. He kept moaning for Miss Lois! Miss Lois! and as soon as we could make out where he came from, the chief sent me to tell you."

We hurried on cloaks and hats, and followed the officer into the chilly November dusk.

It was a little whitewashed cell. Barb was lying on a low pallet, covered with a rough, gray blanket. Barb's eyes were closed, and they did not open as we came in. When Nancy saw him lying so, the wan, gray shadow on his set, still face, she rushed forward and threw herself on her knees beside him, with a passionate cry: "Oh, Barb! Barb! Ye're done goin' to die, and ye haven't got religion, and ye'll go into the fiery furnace foreber an' eber!"

Lois gently drew Nancy away, and knelt in her place, taking both little, bruised, black hands in hers. "Don't listen to her, Barb," she said. "She doesn't know what she says. Dear try to hear and understand what I say. Do you remember the Good Man I used to tell you about, Sunday nights? The one, you know, who healed the sick, and took little children in his arms? You are going to Him, Barb; and He will love you, and help you, and teach you how to live?" The gray lips moved faintly. "Will He be good to me, like you are, Miss Lois? Will He let me get my bref, without its hurtin' me so orful?"

"Dear," she said, "He will be better to you than you can ask or think. Barb, I want you to try and say to Him the little prayer I taught you. Try, dear, try!"

In the silence the weak voice faltered, while Barb held fast the kind hands that seemed an anchorage for him who was drifting so fast away:

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I-pray-de-Lord——"

No need, oh Barb! No need to finish that prayer! The soul you would have commended to His holy keeping had gone to Him.

Who Pays for the Hog.

Columbus (Ga.) Times.

Last week a distinguished citizen of Columbus went down to his plantation, located near Huntsboro, on the Mobile & Girard railroad. On his arrival he found that two of his old negro tenants were involved in a difficulty that was liable to lead to serious results. Both came to him with their grievances, and finally agreed to leave the matter with him.

Dick said he had lost a hog, and was satisfied that Jake had stolen it, but when he asked him about it Jake had knocked him down.

Jake said that Dick had accused him of hog stealing, and that no man coul thus slander him.

After listening to both sides the judge pro tem., decided that the blow offset the slander, and the slander set off the blow, therefore they were both even.

Jake went on his way rejoicing to the cotton patch, but Dick still lingered around, when the judge asked him if he was not satisfied with the decision.

"Yes, sir, dat all sounds mighty nice, and I reckon dats justice," said he, scratching his head. "But, boss, who's gwine ter pay for dat hog?"

Looking out through the window the wise judge could see his vast fields, white with the fleecy staple locks which every passing breeze dislodged, and in wanton mischief rolled in the dust and dirt, and in his mind he calculated the loss he would sustain by a continuation of this feud between two of his best hands and their families, and with a long drawn sigh he exclaimed: "Why, the judge, of course." He at once paid for the missing porker, and Dick also shouldered his basket and started for the cotton patch. But imagine the chagrin of the Solon when he heard him mutter as he turned the corner of the house: "Wonder if de boss got dat hog."

POISONING EPIDEMICS.

Stories Revived by the Disclosures in Hungary.

New York World.

The news recently published of the unearthing of an extensive organization of husband poisoners in Austria may make of interest some notes upon the poisoning mania of the seventeenth century, concerning which Mackay gives some particulars in his "Extraordinary Popular Delusions." The art of slow poisoning, so as to make it seem that the death of the victim had ensued from natural causes, is certainly as old as Grecian and Roman civilization, and is probably of Oriental origin. It was exercised in the middle ages and later by the pretended witches and sorcerers, and finally became a branch of education among all who laid any claim to supernatural art. The frequency of the crime is hinted at by the passage of a statute in the time of Henry VIII., making it treason, and prescribing as the punishment boiling to death. Italy had from an early period been the favorite home of the dealers in murderous drugs. (The story of Lucrezia Borgia, it need hardly be said, is for the most part a sheer invention by Hugo; there is no reason to believe that she ever poisoned any one, and Alexander VI. and Cæsar Borgia were not so very much worse than their time). When the Duke of Guise, in 1648, endeavored to seize upon the Government of Naples, and was advised to put Gennaro Annese, Masaniello's successor in the popular leadership, out of the way, the agent who agreed to assassinate him rejected the proffered dagger with horror as "disgraceful and unbecoming," though avowing his preparedness to use poison. Gennaro, luckily for him, dined upon cabbage salad dressed with oceans of oil, and this saved his life. Guise described the poison as a "clear and beautiful water, with no taste at all." Ten years later the business of poisoning had attained to such proportions that the papal government had to take cognizance of it. The extraordinary abundance of young widows in Rome, and the fact that whenever a married couple lived unhappily together the husband's death was not delayed, had attracted popular attention, and the ecclesiastical authorities were horrified at the frequent number of poisonings admitted by women in the confessional. It came out that there was a mysterious society of young wives, who met nightly for some mysterious purpose at the house of a reputed witch and fortune teller, Hieronyma Spara, and a female agent of the Government had no difficulty in obtaining admission to the sisterhood and purchasing from La Spara a vial of "drops," warranted to work a sure cure in the case of a faithless and brutal husband. It was found to contain a colorless, tasteless, and odorless poison, and the vender compounded it of different degrees of strength, so that death should be brought about after any period desired, from a week to six months. La Spara, La Gratiose, and the members of the sisterhood were apprehended. The first stood the rack with firmness, the second yielded to the torture and made a full confession. She and La Spara, with three young woman who had poisoned their husbands, were were hanged; thirty more were whipped through the streets; and a number of more influential offenders were fined and banished. A few months later nine more husband poisoners were hanged, and a bevy of women, many of them young and beautiful girls, scourged half naked through the streets, but this severity did not put a stop to the poisoning, and indeed only served to advertise the poisoners so that literally thousands of the victims of jealousy, covetousness or private spite, were sent annually to their graves.

The venders of the poison were mostly women, and, by all odds, the most noted of their number was La Tophania, a hag who dealt in poison from her youth, and was instrumental in the death of at least 600 persons. She was about seventy in 1790, when the Viceroy of Naples found that a poison, styled aquatra, or "little water," was sold freely in the city, and shipped in large quantities to all parts of Italy, in bottles labeled "Manna of St. Nicholas of Barri." This "manna" was a most miraculous oil, alleged to ooze from the tomb of the saint, and, being in vogue all over the Italian Peninsula, the custom's officials piously refrained from examining the vials inscribed with its name. La Tophania was not easy to catch. Continually changing her residence and disguises, pretending to excessive piety, and taking refuge in nunneries for months at a time, she baffled the Viceroy for several years, during which the trade went on as briskly as ever, it being a noteworthy circumstance, by the way, that La Tophania would make a present of her poison to poor women who hated their husbands, but could not afford to buy the drug. After a long chase, however, the Viceroy ran her to earth in a convent. The Abbess, supported by the Archbishop, Cardinal Pignatelli, refused to surrender her, and thus precipitated a contest in which the secular official, displayed even more craft and courage than the churchmen. The Viceroy broke into the convent by force and carried off the woman. The Cardinal threatened to lay the city under interdict and starve it out, for no peasant would venture to bring provisions to the markets of a town placed under the bans of the church. The Viceroy put a guard around the Archiepiscopal Palace, so that, if there was to be a famine, it would be first felt by the Cardinal. The Cardinal changed his tactics, and worked upon the mob until it was ready to storm the Viceroy's palace and release the prisoner, and the Viceroy retorted by spreading a report that La Tophania had arranged to poison all the wells and fountains. That settled the matter, and with the hearty sympathy of the populace she was tortured till a list of her agents and customers had been obtained, and then strangled, her body being thrown into the garden of the convent whence she had been taken, so that the clergy might at least bury it within the precincts of the sanctuary where she had sought a refuge. The German Keysler, however, insists that he saw her in prison in Naples, a little old woman, in 1730.

Her poison—Aqua della Toffanian the Neapolitans called it, the name being speedily corrupted into Aqua Tophania, or Aqua Tophana, the popular fancy finding an analogy between it and Tophet—was similar to that manufactured by La Spara. According to Garelli it was crystallized arsenic dissolved in a large quantity of water by decoction, with the addition, for some unexplained purpose, of the herb cymbalaria. Hahnemann says it was compounded of arsenical neutral salts, occasioning in the victim a gradual loss of appetite, faintness, gnawing pains in the stomach and wasting of the lungs. Its use had become general in France as well as in Italy by the latter half of the seventeenth century, so that Mme. de Sevinge had to express her fear that "Frenchmen" and "poisoner" were coming to be regarded as synonymous terms. As in Rome the earliest indications of the extensive use of poisons were given to the clergy through the confessional, many women owning to the destruction of their husbands. Two Italians, Glaser, and Exili, were thrown into the Bastile on the charge of compounding and distributing the poison; the former died, but the latter during the period of his detention ere he was brought to trial, made the acquaintance of one Sainte-Croix, who had been in Italy, and knew something of the secrets of La Spara. Sainte-Croix had been sent to the Bastile on a lettre de cachet obtained by M. d'Aubray, who had been scandalized at the openness of Sainte-Croix's amours with his daughter. Mlle. d'Aubray, a pretty, accomplished, mild-mannered and highly-connected girl, had married the Marquis of Brinvilliers, a loose and brutal man, and had conceived a passion that apparently knew no bounds for the equally worthless Sainte-Croix. The scandal of her connection with him after her separation from her husband horrified her family, as has already been said, and she and her lover were united in a hatred of the deadliest description. Not only revenge, but avarice prompted to crime, for Sainte-Croix was extravagant, and her means were inadequate to his demands. He conceived the plan of poisoning her father and her two brothers, so that she would come into the possession of the family, and she entered into his plans with equal willingness and aptitude, and soon became as skillful as himself in the manufacture of poison. The drugs which he prepared she tried upon pigeons and rabbits; then according to the legend, she essayed the effect of small doses upon patients at the hospitals, and upon guests at her father's table, finally giving herself a powerful draught from the evil effects of which she was saved by the antidote administered by Sainte-Croix. Being thus satisfied of the potency of the poison, she administered it to her father in his chocolate. The old man fell ill, and she nursed him for ten days, giving him more poison in the broths and other delicacies which she prepared for him, and at the end of that time he died, so naturally that no suspicion was aroused. Her two brothers, who came to join her in weeping over the old man's death, were carried off in six weeks' time, Sainte-Croix having hired a servant named La Chausse to assist in administering the poison. The death of the only other heir, Mme. de Brinvilliers' sister, was resolved upon, but she, taking suspicion, fled from Paris. Mme. de Brinvilliers then undertook to kill her husband so as to be free to marry Sainte-Croix, but the latter, not desiring to wed his paramour, administered antidotes and saved the Marquis' life, though his constitution was ruined.

At this juncture, while Sainte-Croix was working in his laboratory in an obscure lodging, the mask which he employed to guard him from the fumes of the powerful poisons he employed slipped off and he was suffocated. The police took possession of his effects, no friends or relations of the dead appearing, and among them was found a small box to which was affixed a document adjuring the finder to deliver it to the Marquise, at her residence, declaring that it belonged to her, and contained nothing that could be of any use to any one else; if Mme. de Brinvilliers should be dead, the box was to be destroyed unopened. The police, of course, opened the box, in which were found sundry vials and packages of powders, her note to Sainte-Croix for 20,000 francs, and papers implicating her and the servant La Chaussee, in the murder of her relatives. As soon as Mme. de Brinvilliers heard of her lover's death she endeavored to obtain possession of the casket, and failing, fled to England. La Chaussee was taken, and under the torture confessed to his share in the crime, for which he had received 100 pistoles and the promise of an annuity. He was broken on the wheel in March, 1673, Mme. de Brinvilliers being sentenced by default to decapitation.

After a three-years residence in England, Mme. de Brinvilliers ventured over to the continent, and took up her residence in a convent at Liege. The French police soon learned of her presence there, and arranged with the authorities for her capture. A detective in the guise of a priest entered the convent "to pay his respects to a lady so beautiful and so unfortunate," and so wrought upon her by his flattery that she agreed to meet him outside the convent walls. She kept the appointment and found herself beyond the protection of the ecclesiastical power, and in the grasp of the French police. La Chaussee's evidence would have been enough to convict her, or the casket left by Sainte-Croix, but besides these she had written to her lover a full statement of her crimes. July 17, 1676, she was condemned to be drawn on a hurdle with her feet bare, a rope about her neck, and a lighted taper in her hand to the great entrance of the Cathedral of Notre Dame, there to make amende honorable; thence she was to be taken to the Place de Greve and beheaded, when her body was to be burned and her ashes scattered to the four winds of heaven. After her sentence she confessed her guilt and met her death fearlessly, asking the executioner to stand beside her so that "that scoundrel, Desgrais," the officer who had entrapped her, might not see her as she passed, and calling to the ladies who thronged the windows along the route: "What have you come to see? A pretty sight, truly!" Her beauty and gracefulness so won upon the populace that before nightfall she was considered a saint and a martyr, and her ashes were fairly fought for and preserved as preventives of witchcraft and all diseases.

LANGUAGE OF THE FACE.

Physiognomy and Its Indices to Traits of Character.

[Phrenological Magazine.]

Round-eyed persons see much, live much in the senses, but think less. Narrow-eyed persons, on the other hand, see less, but think and feel more intensely. It will be observed that the eyes of children are open and round. Their whole life is to receive impressions. It is only when childhood is maturing toward manhood or womanhood that thought comes, if it comes at all. But what is it that most leads to reflection? Experience. Our errors, our surroundings, our failures—these teach us to think before we act, to consider each step, to weigh every motive. When, therefore, the upper eyelid—for it is that which has the greatest amount of nobility—droops over the eye, it indicates not merely reflection but something painful to reflect about. Hence the length or drooping of the eyelid betokens confession and penitence.

The drooping of half of the eyelid from the outer angle to the centre indicates the disposition to confess one's faults to parents or seniors, to a "father confessor," or to the Supreme Being. The drooping of half of the eyelids from the inner angle to the center betokens the disposition to repent and to "do works meet for repentance." Closely allied to these sights are those of prayerfulness and humility. The former is indicated by the muscle which turns the eye directly downward, as represented in the pictures of the Madonna. Prayerfulness is usually large in connection with that of penitence, the reason of which is that between the faculties of penitence and humility there is the same close connection as between confession and prayer. One who has habitually more prayer than humility has the eye turned somewhat upward so that the upward part of the iris is a little covered by the upper eyelid, and so as to leave a slight space between the iris and the lower lid. The reverse is true of one who is more humility than prayer.

The faculty of truth—that is, the love of it—is indicated by the muscle which surrounds the eye, causing folds and wrinkles. Justice is indicated by the muscle which causes perpendicular wrinkles between the eyebrows. Fullness and wrinkles under the eye, for which some persons are remarkable indicate the love of mathematical accuracy; and wrinkles curving upward from the outer angle of the eye and eyebrow indicate probity or personal truthfulness. There are three degrees of the faculty of justice. The first is a kind of exactness or strict honesty in small money matters which some people would call closeness, and is indicated by a singular perpendicular wrinkle or line between the eyebrows. The second is the disposition to require justice in others, and is indicated by two perpendicular lines or wrinkles, one on each side of the center—a very common sign. The third degree is conscientiousness, or the disposition to apply the rule of justice to one's self, and is indicated by three or more wrinkles or lines, especially noticeable, extending above the eyebrow when the muscle is in action. The love of command is indicated by one or more short tranverse wrinkles across the root of the nose, exactly between the eyes. It may be seen in great military commanders, in masters and teachers and in those generally who are fond of exercising authority. In those who are wanting the power to command, and have no desire for responsibility this sign is also absent. The faculty of command frequently acts with that part of justice which reprimands, or requires others to do right, and both together produce that frowning and lowering brow which is so terrible to evil doers, or to those who love to be approved rather than condemned.

Animals in Norway.

London Times.

A correspondent makes the following remarks on a very pleasant feature of the Norwegian character, viz: a kindness to domestic animals. In that country, he says, these animals are treated as friends rather than the slaves of man. As a result, vicious horses are unknown; foals follow their dams at work in the fields or on the road as soon as they have sufficient strength, and thus gently accustom themselves to harness. I heard of a foal trying to force its head into a collar in imitation of its mother. Horses are trained to obey the voice rather than the hand bearing-reins are not used, and the whip, if carried at all, is hardly ever made use of. Great care is taken not to overload carts, especially in the case of young horses, and consequently a broken knee is rarely seen, and the animals continue fat, in good condition, and capable of work till the advanced age of 25 or 30. So tame are the Norwegian horses and cows that they will allow casual passers-by to caress them while they are lying down. Even domestic cats will approach a boy with confidence, knowing that no chasing or worrying awaits them. One very hot Summer's day I met a woman holding up an umbrella to carefully screen what I supposed was a little child at her side from the scorching rays of a midday sun, while her own head was covered only by a handkerchief. In driving by I tried to gain a glimpse of her charge, and found, to my great surprise, that the object of her care was a fat black pig. The question of humane methods of slaughtering animals has lately been prominently brought forward in England. In this the Norwegians show us a good example; they never use the knife without first stunning the animal. In the above remarks I am alluding to the country districts of Norway; in the towns national characteristics become modified, although even under these conditions kindness to animals is still remarkable. To those whose hearts are sickened by the sights of cruelty daily witnessed on our streets it must be a consolation to learn that a country exists where these things are unknown, where men are instinctively considerate to the animals dependent on them, and where no legislation is required to enforce the claims of the dumb creation.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR

A Pennsylvania Tramp Who Wil Eat Nothing but Grass.

A herbivorous tramp was sentenced to the County Jail last Tuesday by a Justice of the Peace of Peace of Philadelphia for threatening to burn a farm house. He was brought to the Jail and delivered into the Sheriff's custody. He wore no shoes and his feet were brown and grimy, and were armed, like his hands, with long, claw-like nails. His face and neck were covered with a short, stubby growth of hair, and his cranium was adorned with the strangest mass of hair that ever grew on human head. It was not unlike an ourang-outang's in color, but it was thick and matted and twisted into a cone like a beehive. It had to be severed from the scalp with a tinsmith's shears. When that had been done the man was taken before the Sheriff and questioned as to his name and residence. He refused to tell, and no persuasion could induce him to divulge his name, age or birth-place. He was placed in a cell, and the Prison-breakfast of bread and molasses and coffee was set before him. It was left untasted, and when the turnkey locked the cell the prisoner threw the bread on the floor and upset the coffee. When a dinner of meat and bread and soup was brought he hurled it in the turnkey's face with a curse, and said, with marked German accent: "That's no dinner; bring me something fit to eat—bring me some grass!" The prisoner went to bed supperless and refused to eat when he awoke.

Sheriff Helst was informed of this strange conduct, and ordered the turnkey to tempt the prisoner's appetite with sweetmeats. This was done, and a dainty meal was placed before tramp who had fasted for nearly two days; but he thrust it from him. The man's seeming fastidiousness, and, thinking that it arose from want of exercise, he opened the door of the cell and allowed the fellow to enter the broad yard of the prison. As soon as his eye rested on the luxurious grass that grew in the yard he gave vent to a loud shout and, falling on his knees, began to pull it up by the roots and eat it. The turnkey looked on in amazement while the man devoured the grass. When he had finished his strange repast he arose and asked the turnkey for "von glass of milk." A quart pitcher of milk was brought him, and he drained it to the last drop, and then stretched himself out at full length on the grass and went to sleep. In an hour he awoke and ate more grass, with chickweed for dessert. He sat on the ground and plucked the weed by the root, stripping the stalks of the seed, which he ate with evident relish.

At supper-time he again regaled himself with grass, and partook also of a liberal quantity of a sharp pungent weed known as "pepper-grass." He ate only the leaves, throwing the stem away. He drank about a pint of milk during the repast, which he washed down with the white liquid. After he had swallowed enough grass to satisfy a country-fair cow, he fell on his hands and knees and crawled about the yard peering into the grass with his keen eye, as if in search of some toothsome morsels. "What are you hunting for, Dutchy?" asked the turnkey, who had been watching him.

"I look for dot vot you call clofer," said the herbeater, looking up, "but I finds him not. Gif me some milk."

Another pint of milk was given to him, and he was then led back to his cell. On the following day he breakfasted again on grass and chickweed, and ate at intervals during the day. All attempts to induce him to substitute more substantial food were useless, and he adhered to his bovine diet, and sat on the grass from dawn till dark, chewing his food contentedly, and grinding the seed to pulp with his strong white teeth. He continued to subsist in this way, and appeared to thrive on his strange diet. He gained flesh, and his cheeks had a better color than before. The turnkey says that he passed his time in eating, drinking, and and praying. He sleeps little, irregular in his habits, and eats at all times and at all hours. The name of man remains a mystery. He is a stranger in Bucks county, and was never seen there until about two weeks ago, when he suddenly appeared in Bedminster township. Physicians and scientific men who have visited him are inclined to believe that he is weak-minded, but the jail-keepers are of the opinion that his mind is perfectly clear. The case is one of considerable interest, and prominent physicians from all parts of the State are flocking to the jail to see the great grass-eater, as he is called.

An Interesting Lion Story.

Popular Science.

The memory of the lion was preserved its ancient haunts long after it had become extinct. The scene of one of the prettiest stories told by Indemius is laid in Mount Pangaeum, which when by Xenophon, must have been a famous haunt of lions.

Endemus tells the tale that in Pangaeum in Thrace a bear attacked the lair of a lion, while it was unguarded, and killed the cubs that were too small and too weak to defend themselves. And when the father and mother came home from hunting somewhere, and saw their children lying dead, they were much aggrieved, and attacked the bear; but she was afraid, and climbed up into a tree as fast as she could, and settled herself down, trying to avoid the attack. Now, when they saw that they could not avenge themselves on her, the lioness did not cease to watch the tree, but sat down in ambush at the foot, eyeing the bear, that was covered with blood. But the lion, as it were, without purpose and distraught with grief, after the manner of a man, rushed off to the mountains, and chanced to light upon a wood-cutter, who in terror, let fall his ax, but the lion fawned upon him, and reaching up saluted him as well as he could, and licked his face with his tongue. And the man took courage. Then the lion encircled him with his tail, and led him, and did not suffer him to leave his ax behind, but pointed with his foot for it to be taken up. And when the man did not understand he took it up in his mouth and reached it to him. Then he followed while the lion led him to his den. And when the lioness saw him she came and made signs, looking at the pitiable spectacle, and then up at the bear. Then the man perceived and understood that the lion had suffered cruel wrong from the bear, and cut down the tree with might and main. And the tree fell, and the lions tore the bear in pieces; but the man the lion led back again, safe and sound, to the place where he lighted on him, and returned him to the very tree he had been cutting.

An Accommodating Lover.

Detroit Free Press.

When a certain family on the Brush farm took a new cook last month it was specifically stated and fully understood that she was not to have any men hanging around the kitchen. She held to the agreement for three or four nights, and then the family discovered that she had a beau. He came regularly every night after that, and three or four nights ago the Colonel was at the back gate waiting for him. When the young man appeared the Colonel threw a whole iceberg into his tones as he inquired:

"Well, sir, did you come here to spark?"

"I did," was the calm reply.

"In love, are you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Who with?"

"Sarah, the cook."

"Oh, I didn't know but you loved one of my daughters," sneered the Colonel.

"No, I don't at present," said the man as he seemed to catch a sudden idea, "but the thing hasn't gone so far with Sarah but what I might break off in case you had something better up stairs for me!"

Sarah doesn't work there any more, but the Colonel won't get over being mad forse veral weeks yet.

Thrift of French Women.

[Paris Letter in Newark Advertiser.]

French women, often stigmatized as the most frivolous of their kind, are in reality the most thrifty—a virtue that frequently degenerates into absolute parsimony. I saw a striking instance of making the best of unregarded trifles the other day, when dining with one who certainly has a reputation for prudence. A cherry pie had been on the table, and the mistress gave strict injunctions that the stones were to be scraped from the plates and placed in her store-room. I ventured to ask the reason, and was told that not only cherry but plum, peach and all manner of stones, whether cooked or raw, were invariably saved, gently dried in the oven, and kept in a great jar. "Then," said madame, "in the Winter, when the fire burns clear and bright in the evening, I fetch a handful and throw them among the glowing coals. They crack and splutter for a moment, send up a brilliant flame, and the whole room is filled with a delicious odor."

Thanksgiving.

The following Thanksgiving proclamation has been issued:

By the President of the United States—A Proclamation.

In conformity with a custom the annual observance of which is justly held in honor by this people, I, Chester A. Arthur, President of the United States, do hereby set apart Thursday, the 30th day of November next, as a day of public thanksgiving. The blessings demanding our gratitude are numerous and varied: For the peace and amity which subsist between this republic and all the nations of the world; for freedom from internal discord and violence; for increasing friendship between the different sections of this land of liberty, of justice, and constitutional government; for the devotion of the people to our free institutions, and their cheerful obedience to mild laws; for the constantly-increasing strength of the republic while extending its privileges to our fellow-men, who come to us; for the improved means of internal communication and increased facilities of intercourse with other nations; for the general prevailing health of the year; for the prosperity of all our industries and the liberal return for the mechanic's toil, affording a market for the abundant harvests of the husbandman; for the preservation of the national faith and credit; for the wise and generous provision to effect the intellectual and moral education of our youths; for the influence upon the conscience of restraining and transforming religion, and for the joys of home; for these, and for many other blessings, we should give thanks.

Wherefore I do recommend that the day above designated be observed throughout the country as a day of national thanksgiving and prayer, and that the people, ceasing from their daily labors and meeting in accordance with their several forms of worship, draw near the throne of Almighty God, offering to him praise and gratitude for the manifold goodness which he has vouchsafed to us, and praying that his blessings and his mercies may continue; and I do further recommend that the day thus appointed be made a special occasion for deeds of kindness and charity to the suffering and needy, so that all who dwell within the land may rejoice and be glad in this season of national thanksgiving.

In Witness whereof, I hereto set my hand and cause the seal of the United States be affixed. Done at the city of Washington, this 25th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1882, and of the independence of the United States the 107th. CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

Habits of the Codfish.

Laramie Boomerang.

A Correspondent of the New York Post says that the codfish frequents "the table lands of the sea." The codfish no doubt does this to secure as nearly as possible a dry, bracing atmosphere. This pure air of the submarine table lands gives to the codfish that breadth of chest and depth of lungs which we have always noticed.

The glad, free smile of the codfish is largely attributed the exhilaration of this oceanic altitootiedum.

The correspondent further says that "the cod subsists largely on the sea cherry." Those who have not had the pleasure seeing the codfish climb the sea cherry tree in search of food, clubbing the fruit from the heavily laden branches with the chunks of coral, have missed a very fine sight.

The codfish, when at home rambling through the submarine forests, does not wear his vest unbuttoned, as he does while loafing around the grocery stores of the United States.

Rich Widows.

New York Letter in Cincinnati Gazette.

Mrs. A. T. Stewart, who is the richest widow in the Union, is a native of this city, and was born in humble life. Her brother, the late Charles Clinch, considered himself fortunate to get a berth in the custom house, where he gradually become an expert, and was retained longer than any official. She married Stewart while she was keeping a petty retail store, and they began housekeeping under very humble circumstances. When Stewart got up in the world one of the indications was found in the fact that he and his wife took board at the Astor House, which then was the finest hotel in the city. Mrs. Stewart now occupies the grandest private mansion, with but one exception, in America, which during her visit to Saratoga is in the care of a family of trusty servants. The apartments for the latter are more elegant than anything the Stewarts had during the first ten years of their married life.

Mrs. Stewart has for many years been a member of St. Mark's Church, but she was kept on such a short allowance by her husband that she could not assist in any of the benevolent operations of the society. Her parsimony at last became proverbial, but it was solely due to the hard-hearted husband. Since his death she has shown some liberality, though by no means to that extent which might have been expected. Mrs Stewart's property is estimated at $10,000,000, not including the palace she occupies, which cost $1,000,000. The taxes on this building were last year $9,000, and this year may be a trifle less. Mrs. Stewart's pastor (Rylance) recently visited England, of which country he is a native. He could there mention the remarkable fact that a lady in his congregation was engaged in building a cathedral as a monument for her husband. Such things have seldom been done even in the old world.

The Commodore's widow is the youngest of all the rich widows, and has thus far had the best chance. Her life has been somewhat eventful. She is an old acquaintance of the Vanderbilts, and was married early, but not happily. According to report she obtained a divorce, and then supported herself teaching music. During the war she was in the South, and was aided pecuniarily by the Commodore. At its close she came North, and as the Commodore soon afterward became a widower, their marriage was a natural consequence. Mrs. Vanderbilt is under fifty. She has a legacy of $800,000, being at the rate of $100,000 a year for her married life, and the interest on this is equal to $1,000 per week. She can now marry to suit herself. She has long been an admirer of Deems, the preacher, and this influence led the Commodore to endow the Nashville College. She attends the "Church of the Strangers," where Deems preaches, his tenets being much the same as those held by the Methodists. He has the free use of the church for life, and therefore cannot go into the itinerancy.

Raw starch, applied with a little water, as a paste, will generally remove all stains from bed ticking.

Silver in constant use is kept nice and bright by washing every day in warm soap suds and drying in with old linen.

To clean and polish tortoise-shell, use a drop or two of sweet oil, and rub it in thoroughly with the ball of the thumb.

Burns and scalds are immediately relieved by an application of dry soda covered with a wet cloth, moist enough to dissolve it.

To clean irons use a lump of beeswax tied in a rag; rub the irons with it when hot, and then scour with a paper or cloth, sprinkled with salt.

A starch that will make linen look as good as new is made of one quart of well-boiled corn starch, three ounces of gum arabic and two ounces of loaf sugar.

Silk handkerchiefs washed in clear water with pure white castile soap look like new. Do not iron, but snap between the fingers until almost dry, and then press under a weight.

To cure earache, take a pinch of black pepper, put it in a piece of cotton batting dipped in sweet oil, and place in the ear, tie a bandage around the head, and it will give almost instant relief.

Oxalic acid, is excellent for destroying ink and rust stains on white goods. Dissolve it in lukewarm water, and dip the spot in it and let it remain for a moment, and then rub it with the fingers.

To remove ink stains from wood take half a teaspoonful of oil of vitriol and dilute it with a tablespoonful of water, and apply with a feather to the damaged spot. Let it remain for a few moments and then rub it off quickly. If not successful the first time, repeat until the ink is entirely removed.

To clean and renew black silk, use one quart of soft water and an old kid glove. Boil down to one pint, and then sponge the goods with a piece of soft flannel and iron on the wrong side while it is damp, and the silk will be as stiff and glossy as new. For a light-colored silk use a white glove.

Glorious Climate of California.

Carson City (Nev.) Appeal.

"Sinc" Barnes tells a racy story of his experience at Santa Monica, the new summer resort of southern California. "I was down in that section a few months ago," said "Sinc," "and pretty nearly busted when I fell in with Jones, the senator, and told him my condition. He fell right up abreast of the situation and told me he could give me a job. "I want a lot of men to keep in the water all day to show visitors how delightful surf-bathing is. You see these people from the east have acquired a sort of prejudice against the Pacific ocean, and I want to counteract the feeling. I want you to boss eight men and keep 'em tumbling round in the billows, the sport of the laughing sea, in striped costumes—men who can run out on the beach every ten minutes and tell how warm the water is.

"Well, I caught the idea, and agreed to furnish the crowd for $20 a day, and we closed the bargain. I hired eight men at $1 a head to battle there all the afternoon, and I pocketed the balance. I got a green and blue striped suit, with the flag of the Union across the stomach, and rushed about keeping the gang alive. The second day they struck for $2, because the water was so cold. I tried to explain about the trade winds and harvest moon tide, but they wanted the money all the same. Then three quit, but Jones didn't miss 'em, and I kept even financially. Then two froze to death right on the beach, and I had to get a coroner's jury to find a verdict from overheating in the water. The balance of the gang left, and I had to go it alone. I got so inured to the cold that I could rush out of water, skip up to the English tourists and tell 'em it was just lovely, and keep my teeth still all the while. I got my $20 every night, and spent it all for warm drinks. Then I quit, as my constitution was giving way. When I left he had eight Irishmen off the railroad doing the bathing for the hotel, and they had a fire going all the while back of some rocks, where the men could warm up between swims. That is a great climate down there."

Curious, Useful, and Scientific.

Dr. Hewson asserts that the common sparrow is liable to have small-pox, and is capable of communicating that disease.

A paint composed of oil and graphite is found to be the best thing to prevent the corrosive action of sulphurous acid fumes in smoke-stacks.

The persistence of the magnetic property observed in certain trees is attributed by M. Larroque to the transportation by lightning of small particles of iron held in suspension with other matter, which makes up what is known as the dust of the air.

Experiments have shown that firing with a nine-inch twelve-ton gun at armor plating three and four inches thick, representing a deck of a vessel inclined between ten degrees and fifteen degrees, in no instance caused penetration although full charges were used.

Paper is made in Belgium which very closely resembles satin. Common paper is covered with a suitable size, and while the surface is moist asbestos dyed to any desired shade is sprinkled over it. Any superfluous matter is easily shaken off when the size is dry. Fine effects are sometimes produced with aniline colors.

Mr. F. J. Faraday is inclined to the belief that the breathing of air devoid of the usual quantity of oxygen is apt to develop germs otherwise harmless into those which produce consumption. As giving support to his hypothesis he cites the decrease of consumption in well ventilated barracks, and the relief afforded to patients by sea voyages, the air of pine woods, and the inhalation of carbolic acid.

Professor Whitney does not lay any weight on the removal of forests as a cause for the dryness and desolation of former fertile and populous regi[illegible] the earth. He admits that the g[illegible] proportion of land to water in late geological eras may have a little to do with the decreased rainfall; but he attributes the diminished precipitation mainly to a lowering of the intensity of solar radiation during geological time.

A Balloon Adventure.

Paris Correspondence Albany Journal.

I hardly know how to speak of the balloon voyage of Mlle. Lea d'Asco so as not to offend. As it is a characteristic event of what can go on here without shocking [illegible] I will have to relate it a[illegible] Mlle. Lea d'Asco i[illegible] achieved great success at the Palais Royal and Porte Sain[illegible] in roles in which there was [illegible] to show and little [illegible] In this last ambition she has [illegible] dy successful. Her pres[illegible] is the Count de Lagrange, [illegible] greatest owner of race [illegible] France. Some ten days a[illegible] d'Asco took it int[illegible] head that a balloon [illegible] amusing and would a[illegible] a capital advertisement for the coming season. The count would refuse his Lea no reasonable request, so a distinguished aeronaut and his balloon were secured to give Mlle. d'Asco and the count a ride above the clouds. The ascent was made successfully in the presence of an admiring crowd. The aerial excursionists landed the same afternoon at a place called Mercy. How they landed I will allow Mlle. Lea d'Asco to relate for herself in a telegram she sent to the Parisian papers, and which, with hardly an exception, they published, and which I translate verbatim:

"We have landed in Mery in the midst of a drenching rain, and without any clothing whatever. Had to throw everything overboard to escape the lake and the tree-tops. We are now hunting for our clothes. The balloon is safe. On the whole a picturesque and really enchanting trip. I can think of nothing but of taking another one."

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

BAD BREATH!
Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!
How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!
Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!
This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

KING'S MAGIC TOOTH ACHE CURE

Failing!

That is what a great many people are doing. They don't know just what is the matter, but they have a combination of pains and aches, and each month they grow worse.

The only sure remedy yet found is BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, and this by rapid and thorough assimilation with the blood purifies and enriches it, and rich, strong blood flowing to every part of the system repairs the wasted tissues, drives out disease and gives health and strength.

This is why BROWN'S IRON BITTERS will cure kidney and liver diseases, consumption, rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, malaria, intermittent fevers, &c.

Mr. Simon Blanchard, a well-known citizen of Hayesville, Meade county, Kentucky, says: "My wife had been sick for a long time, and her constitution was all broken down and she was unable to work. She was advised to use Brown's Iron Bitters, and found it to work like a charm. We would not now be without it for any consideration, as we consider it the best tonic in the world."

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is not a drink and does not contain whiskey. It is the only preparation of Iron that causes no injurious effects. Get the genuine. Don't be imposed on with imitations.

HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER

Has been in constant use by the public for over twenty years, and is the best preparation ever invented for RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOR AND LIFE.

It supplies the natural food and color to the hair glands without staining the skin. It will increase and thicken the growth of the hair, prevent its blanching and falling off, and thus AVERT BALDNESS.

It cures Itching, Eruptions and Dandruff. As a HAIR DRESSING it is very desirable, giving the hair a silken softness which all admire. It keeps the head clean, sweet and healthy.

The State Assayer and Chemist of Mass. and leading Physicians endorse and recommend it as a great triumph in medicine.

"I Hain't Gwine ter do Hit."

A pony, that looked very much as if it was far gone in consumption, was tied to a lamp-post, and standing on the sidewalk in front of Mose Schaumburg's emporium, on Austin Avenue. The colored porter came out, and seeing the pony tied to the lamp-post, and old Uncle Mose leaning against it, said banteringly:

"Look heah, ole man, jess you onhitch dat ar crowbait from offen dat ar [illegible]."

"I hain't gwine ter do hit," said Uncle Mose, sullenly.

"[illegible] y lo 't yer hire a cart," continued the colored porter, "and hab him moved out inter de mesquit bushes whar de buzzards kin hold a convention on de ole bag ob bones? Ontie your hoss, ole man. Hit am agin de law ter tie hosses ter lamp-postses."

"I hain't gwine ter do hit," replied old Mose.

"I'll see about dat ar," responded the colored porter. So he went in and told the clerk, who came out and said:

"Look here, uncle, you will have to move that horse. He draws flies, and besides, he may fall down on somebody and break some customer in two. You will be fined if you tie your horse to a lamp-post. Unhitch him right off."

"I hain't gwine ter do hit."

"You ain't—well, I'll show you." So the clerk went in and told Mose Schaumburg himself, that a sassy nigger had tied his horse to the lamp-post, and cash customers were afraid of being kicked, and were doing their trading at other stores."

Schaumburg come out in his shirt-sleeves, with a yard-stick in his hand, and said coaxingly to old Mose, with a genial smile:

"Mine fren, vere you gets dot fine pooded animal? I vish you vould do me de favor to move him avay mine door pefore."

"I hain't gwine ter do hit."

"I do'ls you vat," urged Schaumburg, "ven you dakes dot horse avay right off, some of dese fine days don't you forget it, I makes you a splendid Christmas present of a pair of nish new suspenders, by schimminy grashus."

"I done tole yer, I hain't gwine ter do hit."

The Schaumburg lost control of himself. Before anybody could prevent him, he ran his hand into his hip pocket. Old Uncle Mose's eyes began to stick out, and his legs to wabble about, when Schaumburg drew forth, not a pistol, but a police whistle, upon which he began to improvise a lively tune.

About forty men, supposing a fight was going on, poured out of neighboring saloons, like bees out of a hive. The gentlemen who sit in front of the Brunswick hotel, and squirt tobacco juice on the sidewalk, went on the doublequick to where Schaumburg was still engaged on his solo. There were men in the crowd with towels about their necks and lather on one side of their faces. Upwards of two hundred excited men were gathered around Schaumburg and Uncle Mose, the former still playing on his wind instrument, while the sly old nigger was holding his hand to his ear, and his head on one side, as if Schaumburg intended the musical performance for the special amusement of the aged African. Everybody in town, except the police, seemed to be there, and everybody suspected Uncle Mose of some horrible crime.

Finally two policemen in uniform pushed their way through the crowd, and with drawn revolvers wanted to know what was the cause of the riot. Schaumburg brought his concert to a close, and pointing to Uncle Mose, said:

"He vont dake his old horse from dot lamp-post avay."

"I hain't guine ter do hit," said Uncle Mose selemnly.

"Uncle Mose, why don't you untie that horse and lead him off?" asked a friendly voice in the crowd.

"Because dat ar hoss don't belong ter me. I hain't gwine to' ontie and lead off a hoss I nebber seed before. I'se seed too many men in Texas tied up so dar feet didn't reach de ground for foolin' wid hosses what didn't belong to 'em."

There was a roar from the crowd.

"Why didn't you say so before, that it wasn't your horse?" asked the indignant policeman.

"Bekase nobody ask me."

The crowd began to disperse good-humoredly, notwithstanding the voice of Schaumburg could be heard several blocks off, like the voice of one crying in the wilderness: "Schentlemen, don't tear yourselves avay. Choost valk right in and inspect my new stock of schentlemanly underwear, shoes, boots, hats, which vas being given away to make room for new goods.—[Texas Siftings.

TESTIMONIALS.

GENTLEMEN: Your buggies have given me entire satisfaction, both in style and durability. I have used them for the past three years. Your recent improvements on road wagons I consider the best in the market.

M[illegible] ES H. BAMBURG.
Frederick Maryland.

DEAR SIRS: We have used buggies of your make that have been in use three years, and no buggy we have that cost twice the amount has given better satisfaction.

JAMES H. ALEXANDER.
Johnstown Pa.

GENTLEMEN: We have used the Columbus Buggy Company's work for the last five years and can conscientiously recommend it as strictly first class as to style, material, workmanship and durability. Your buggies have given better satisfaction than any other make of vehicles we had in use for the last ten years

PALMER & WHITTAKER.

GENTLEMEN: It gives me pleasure to state that I have been selling your buggies and carriages for four years, and can safely recommend them to any one in want of a buggy or carriage. Yours Truly, J. L. GRIBBLE.
Macomb, Illinois.

GENTLEMEN: With over fifteen years experience in building buggies, wagons, &c., I do not hesitate in saying your buggies and carriages are strictly first-class in workmanship, material and proportions, filling a long felt want for a reliable article that can be sold at a price lower than any ordinary manufacturer can produce and sell the same quality of work at. Yours, etc. I.S. KRICK, Conneautville Pa

GENTLEMEN: I have used your Brewster side bar buggies for four years together with buggies that cost me $[illegible] and $[illegible], and your buggies were the first that went out, on account of being side-bar. They have not cost me $5 for repairs, and those I have sold of your make have given good satisfaction. I think that you make the cheapest and best road wagons that are made in the United States for the money.
Respectfully, P. H. HAMLIN, Lawrence Kansas.

DEAR SIRS: We have been using your buggies for the last four or five years. They have given entire satisfaction. I think they are the best buggies made for the money.
W. B. GRIMES & CO., Liverymen Whitehall Illinois.

GENTLEMEN: We have been handling your work for two seasons, and have in every instance found your buggies first class. We never have had one of your jobs returned to us for repairs; neither have we had a single complaint on account of work not being perfectly satisfactory. Very Respectfully, H.P. BUCKLEY & CO., Springfield, Illinois.

GENTLEMEN. I have no hesitancy in saying that the buggies manufactured by the Columbus Buggy Company are the best work for the price I have any knowledge of. In not a single instance has there been any dissatisfaction on the part of any one of my customers.

FRANK L. HALL.
Owensboro, Ky.

DEAR SIRS: For the past two years we have used your buggies side by side with other makes in both our stables, and are perfectly satisfied with the strength, durability and workmanship compared with others. As fast as our stock in livery is used up we shall replace them with your manufacture, knowing from experience that it is the best we can do. Respectfully,

The government has abolished the coinage of the three cent silver pieces and as fast as they are received at the treasury they are recoined.

The Arkansas Gazette says that as a fruit growing state Arkansas is developing wonderfully fast. The apple crop this year is prodigious and can not be taken care of. Thousands of bushels are being dried and shipped to all parts of the world.

A close and careful estimate places this year's corn crop at 1,800,000,000 bushels; oats, 480,000,000 bushels; potatoes, 160,000,000 bushels. In the abstract, these are dry figures, but among other things they mean high prosperity for this country for another year at least.

"Is the fly a nuisance or a blessing?' asks the Inter Ocean. Of course it depends of the circumstances. A fly in the butter is a recognized nuisance, but a fly on a man's nose when he is sitting for a photograph lends a pleasant expression to his features, and is indisputably a blessing.

School Marm—"Johnny, do you know your tables?" Johnny—"Yes, ma'm; breakfast table, dinner table and supper table." School Marm—"No! no! Johnny; I mean the table of measures." Johnny—"Yes, ma'm it takes a five year old suit to fit me. My pa bought me one t'other day at Ochs's, and they just fit like they was made to measure."

1882 has been a remarkably prosperous year for South Carolina, as is shown by the report of the state commissioner of agriculture. As compared with 1881 there has been an increase in the value of farm products and kindred industries of $18,803,311. Which is good for South Carolina, and the entire south and the whole country.

In a short time a new system for transacting the money order business by our postmasters will go into operation, when it will cost but three cents to send a money order for a sum less than $5. The service has also been extended so that $100 will be the limit for these orders. The charges will be greately appreciated.

During the first ten months of the present year, 407,431 emigrants landed at Castle Garden, against 386,079 for the same period last year. This shows an increase of arrivals this year so far of 21,352. More than one-third of the emigrants of this year have come from Germany, the next highest in number being the Irish and English emigrants.

We have received from Ayer & Son their Newspaper Annual for 1882. It is no doubt the most complete work of the kind ever issued from the press. We believe it to be as nearly correct as it is possible to make it. Every one knows how difficult it is to get a correct list of the circulation and other facts concerning newspapers. But this delicate and difficult task they have accomplished. The list is probably the most correct ever issued.

Mr. S. P. Imhoff, of Waterloo, Ind., has taken up his residence in Columbia City and proposes to engage extensively in the ice business. Mr. Imhoff informs us that he will erect two large ice-houses on the banks of Eel river, near Jacob Hose's, two miles south of town. Work is already begun on the ice-houses, and Mr. Imhoff will be prepared to furnish our citizens with the congealed article next summer in large or small quantities as may be desired. We wish the gentleman financial success in his undertaking.—[Columbia City Post.

Miss Lowery horsewhipped Edward Orr, at Gray's Falls, Ontario, because he preferred another girl in marriage. Her two brothers and new lover held him fast while she applied the whip. That happened a year ago. Orr obtained the whip, and has since flogged each of the three men separately with it, the last to receive punishment getting so much that he was confined to his bed for a week. The girl then became frightened, and wrote to ask if she, too, was to be whipped. Orr replied that he had no such intention, but thought he might feel impelled to thrash her father and several of her cousins unless they treated him with deference.

A New Feature.

When the announcement that the congress of the United States had refused to grant the appropriation needed to defray the expenses of continuing the publication of the bulletin of the national board of health reached us we were in Europe. The expressions of regret at this action we there heard, and the complaints from all parts of this country that have since reached us from those capable of appreciating the value of these records, induced us to propose to the national board of health that we would give space to print the most important information heretofore published in the Bulletin, if the board would place at our disposal such data as would enable us to make the necessary compilations.

This offer having been accepted, we have provided for a permanent increase in the size of the Sanitary Engineer, and one page at least in each issue will be devoted to the purpose of continuing, so far as we are able, the work hitherto performed by the Bulletin.

It may be well to state that in taking up this new feature, our purpose is, first, to make this journal of more value to its readers; and secondly, it seemed to us desirable to keep together the corps of correspondents of the Board, many of whom might be unwilling to continue sending information not likely to be promptly available for public inspection and comparison. This work would have been begun sooner, but for the fact of our absence from the country, before alluded to. It is proposed to develop this department as rapidly as the interest in it is made manifest.—Sanitary Engineer.

A Clear Passage in the Arctic Sea.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—The Revenue Marine service of the Treasury Department received advices this morning from the revenue steamer, Corwin, in a communication dated Dunalaki. It says the Corwin had steamed within a short distance of point Barrow in the Arctic and found clear water as far as could be seen. The commander ventured the opinion that if he had been prepared, and had any object in making the attempt, that he could have taken the vessel directly through to New York. The communication will be made public this afternoon. The statement that the Corwin had arrived at San Francisco recently is eroneous.

Captain Healy visited habitations of natives of King's Island, in the Arctic Ocean, a curious people who live upon a precipitous hillside as no other people live. He says the houses are erected upon poles; the entrance to each is effected through a hole in the front wall about fourteen inches in diameter.

The Corwin is now on her return voyage by way of Sitka to San Francisco.

Measurements of the Great Lakes.

The following measurements of the great lakes have been taken by the government surveyors: The greatest length of Lake Superior is 335 miles; its greatest breadth is 160 miles; mean depth, 688 feet; elevation, 827 feet; area, 82,000 square miles. The greatest length of Lake Michigan is 300 miles; its greatest breadth, 108 miles; mean depth, 690 feet; elevation, 506 feet; area, 23,000 square miles. The greatest length of Lake Huron is 300 miles; its greatest breadth is 60 miles; mean depth, 600 feet; elevation, 274 feet; area, 20,000 square miles. The greatest length of Lake Erie, is 260 miles; its greatest breadth is 80 miles; elevation 261 feet; mean depth is 84 feet; area, 9,000 square miles. The greatest length of Lake Ontario is 180 miles; its greatest breadth is 65 miles; its mean depth is 500 feet; elevation 261 feet; area, 6,000 square miles.

A Nevada girl had a very preceptible moustache, and on the morning of her wedding day she undertook to remove it with a caustic preparation. Her lips were burned to such a black and swollen condition that she refused to show herself to the guests. As the bridegroom would not consent to a postponement, the ceremony was performed privately, and the company consoled themselves with a dinner. The bride started on her honeymoon journey closely veiled and unkissed by her friends.

Eighty-Five Dollars Lost.

"You do not tell me that your husband is up and entirely cured by so simple a medicine as Parker's Ginger Tonic?" "Yes, indeed, I do," said Mrs. Benjamin to her neighbor, and after we had lost eighty-five dollars in doctor bills and prescriptions. Now my husband feels as well as ever. 44-4w

The Flower City Europe.

THE COMMOTION CAUSED BY THE STATEMENT OF A PHYSICIAN.

An unusual article from the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle, was published in this paper recently and has been the subject of much conversation both in professional circles and on the street. Apparently it caused more commotion in Rochester, as the following from the same paper shows:

Dr. J. B. Henion, who is well known not only in Rochester, but in nearly every part of America, sent an extended article to this paper, a few days since which was duly published, detailing his remarkable experience and rescue from what seemed to be certain death. It would be impossible to enumerate the personal enquiries which have been made at our office as to the validity of the article, but they have been so numerous that further investigation of the subject was deemed an editorial necessity.

With this end in view a representative of this paper called on Dr. Henion, at his residence on St. Paul street, when the following interview occured: "That article of yours, Doctor, has created quite a whirlwind. Are the statements about the terrible condition you were in, and the way you were rescued such as you can sustain?"

"Every one of them and many additional ones. Few people ever get so near the grave as I did and then return, and I am not surprised that the public think it marvelous. It was marvelous."

"How in the world did you, a physician, come to be brought so low?"

"By neglecting the first and most simple symptoms. I did not think I was sick. It is true I had frequent headaches; felt tired most of the time; could eat nothing one day and was ravenous the next; felt dull indefinite pains and my stomach was out of order, but I did not think it meant anything serious."

"But have these common ailments anything to do with the fearful Bright's disease which took so firm a hold on you?"

"Anything? Why, they are the sure indications of the first stages of that dreadful malady. The fact is, few people know or realize what ails them, and I am sorry to say that too few physicians do either."

"That is a strange statement, Doctor."

"But it is a true one. The medical profession have been treating symptoms instead of diseases for years, and it is nigh time it ceased. We doctors have been clipping off the twigs when we should strike at the root. The symptoms I have just mentioned or any unusual action or irritation of the water channels indicate the approach of Bright's disease even more than a cough announces the coming of consumption. We do not treat the cough, but try to help the lungs. We should not waste our time trying to relieve the headache, stomach, pains about the body or other symptoms, but go directly to the kidneys, the source of most of these ailments."

"This, then, is what you meant when you said that more than one-half the deaths which occur arise from Bright's disease, is it not doctor?"

"[illegible]ely. Thousand of so-called diseases are torturing people to-day, when in reality it is Bright's disease in some one of its many forms. It is a Hydra-headed monster, and the slightest symptoms should strike terror to every one who has them. I can look back and recall hundreds of deaths which physicians declared at the time were caused by paralysis, apoplexy, heart disease, pneumonia, malarial fever and other common complaints which I see now were caused by Bright's disease."

"And did all these cases have simple symptoms at first?"

"Every one of them, and might have been cured as I was by the timely use of the same remedy—Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. I am getting my eyes thoroughly opened in this matter and think I am helping others to see the facts and their possible danger also. Why, there are no end of truths bearing on this subject. If you want to know more about it go and see Mr. Warner himself. He was sick the same as I, and is the healthiest man in Rochester to-day. He has made a study of this subject and can give you more facts than I can. Go, too, and see Dr. Lattimore, the chemist, at the university. If you want facts there are any quanity of them showing the alarming increase of Bright's disease, its simple and deceptive symptoms, and that there is but one way by which it can be escaped."

Fully satisfied of the truth and force of the Doctor's words, the reporter bade him good day and called on Mr. Warner at his establishment on Exchange street. At first Mr. Warner was inclined to be reticent, but learning that the information desired was about the alarming increase of Bright's disease, his manner changed instantly and he spoke very earnestly:

"It is true that Bright's disease has increased wonderfully, and we find, by reliable statistics, that in the past ten years its growth has been 250 per cent. Look at the prominent men it has carried off: Everett, Sumner, Chase, Wilson, Carpenter, Bishop Haven and others. This is terrible, and shows a greater growth than that of any other known complaint. It should be plain to every one that something must be done to check this increase or there is no knowing where it may end."

"Do you think many people are afflicted with it to-day who do not realise it, Mr. Warner?"

"Hundreds of thousands. I have a striking example of this truth which has just come to my notice. A prominent professor in a New Orleans medical college was lecturing before his class on the subject of Bright's disease. He had various fluids under microscopic analysis, and was showing the students what the indications of this terrible malady were. In order to show the contrast between healthy and unhealthy fluids, he had provided a vial the contents of which were drawn from his own person. And now gentlemen, he said, as you have seen the unhealthy indications, I will show you how it appears in a state of perfect health, and he submitted his own fluid to the usual test. As he watched the results his countenance suddenly changed—his color and command had both left him, and in a trembling voice he said: Gentlemen, I have made a painful discovery; I have Bright's disease of the kidneys, and in less than a year he was dead."

"You believe then that it has no symptoms of its own and is frequently unknown even by the person who is afflicted with it?"

"It has no symptoms of its own and very often none at all. Usually no two people have the same symptoms, and frequently death is the first symptom. The slightest indications of any kidney difficulty should be enough to strike terror to any one. I know what I am talking about, for I have been through all the stages of kidney disease."

"You know of Dr. Henion's case?"

"Yes, I have both read and heard of it."

"It is very wonderful, is it not?"

"A very prominent case but no more so than a great many others that have come to my notice as having been cured by the same means."

"You believe then that Bright's disease can be cured?"

"I know it can. I know it from experience of hundreds of prominent persons who were given up to die by both their physicians and friends."

"You speak of your own experience, what was it?"

"A fearful one. I had felt languid and unfitted for business for years. But I did no know what ailed me. When, however, I found it was kidney difficulty I thought there was little hope and so did the doctors. I have since learned that one of the physicians of this city pointed me out to a gentleman on the street one day saying: 'there goes a man who will be dead within a year.' I believe his words would have proven true if I had not fortunately secured and used the remedy known as Warners Safe Kidney and Liver Cure."

"And this caused you to manufacture it?"

"No it caused me to investigate. I went to the principal cities, saw physicians prescribing and using it and I therefore determined as a duty I owed humanity and the suffering, to bring it within their reach, and now it is known in every part of America, is sold in every drug store and has become a household necessity."

The reporter left Mr. Warner much impressed with the earnestness and sincerity of his statements and next paid a visit to Dr. S. A. Lattimore at his residence on Prince street. Dr. Lattimore, although engaged on some matters connected with the State Board of Health of which he is one of the analysis, courteously answered the questions that were propounded to him.

"Did you make a chemical analysis of the case of H. H. Warner some three years ago, Doctor?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did this analysis show you."

"The presence of albumen and tube cast in great abundance."

"And what did the symptoms indicate?"

"A serious disease of the kidneys."

"Did you think Mr. Warner could recover?"

"No, sir; I did not think it possible. It was seldom, indeed, that so pronounced a case had, up to that time, ever been cured."

"Do you know anything about the remedy which cured him?"

"Yes, I have chemically analyized it and upon critical examination, find it entirely free from any poisonous or deleterious substances"

We publish the foregoing statements in view of the commotion which the publicity of Dr. Henion's article has caused and to meet the protestations which have been made. The standing of Dr. Henion, Mr. Warner and Dr. Lattimore in the community is beyond question and the statements they make, cannot for a moment be doubted. They conclusively show that Bright's disease of the kidneys is one of the most deceptive and dangerous of all diseases, that it is exceedingly common, alarmingly increasing and that it can be cured.

Two weeks ago we mentioned the case of a Mr. Sechler, near Newville, Ind., wandering away while in an abnormal condition of mind, and the subsequent earnest search for him dead or alive. And now comes the last of the sad news. Last Thursday morning, just two weeks from the time of his disappearance, two small boys, while going along the river a mile from Newville, discovered the remains of the unfortunate man. The body was in the river, erect, with the top of the head above water. The cause of the body assuming such a strange attitude was his feet being stuck in the mud and the weight in his pockets, which were filled with stones. The supposition is that while on the road he filled his pockets with stones and when coming to the river jumped in, and it being muddy at that point his feet stuck in the mud. Deceased was a wealthy farmer, owning two farms near Newville and had considerable personal property and ready money. He was a bachelor about 30 years old. He was a hard working man and his derangement, it is thought, was caused by overwork.—[Hicksville News

Speaking of the building of the Nickel Plate and its recent sale at enormous figures, the Railway Age says: "The little party of shrewd Wall street speculators looked the ground over and concluded that a good many millions might be extorted by one bold undertaking—the construction of a parallel and competing road. They went to work with a vigor worthy of a better cause. They poured out millions for building a road for which there was no need or excuse, accompanying the work with ominous threats of disturbance in rates and business they would make when their line got into operation, and the scheme succeeded; they have terrified other men into taking the property off their hands and paying them a clear profit, stated at $1[illegible],000,000. This may be called admirable enterprise; it may be called something entirely opposite. It is feared that the success of this Nickel Plate may encourage the establishment of a new and dangerous industry.—[Ft. Wayne News.

Our world has battle-fields where truth and right
Find heroes cooler, greater in God's sight,
Than they who fall foremost in gory fight.

Great hours bring forth great souls, but bugle call
Summons a host, poor, impotent and small,
To that God sends forth in his cause to fall.

Beyond the [illegible] of battle lies the prize,
The [illegible] of strife and toil and sacrifice;
Few gain it here, but many in the skies.

The [illegible] who braves the world's neglect and scorn,
To lift the lowly, succor the forlorn,
Who conquers self—he is a hero born.

His name may die, forgotten by his peers,
But yet the seed he sowed in care and tears
Shall bear rich harvests through immortal years.

SAVED, BY A SNAKE.

Some thirty years ago I was following my profession of land agent in the West, and in that capacity I had to [illegible] by the government upon settlers who had not paid for their lands. Of course I made many enemies, and more than once I had been warned that my life was in danger. I paid little heed to these threats, however, and trusted to my sagacity and a brace of good pistols for my safety. On one occasion I was obliged to pass over a wild unsettled country of about thirty miles in extent, and a guide became necessary. The landlord of the tavern where I stopped undertook to provide one for me, and on the morning I was to start he introduced me to about as ill-favored a specimen of humanity as it had ever been my lot to encounter. I instinctively recoiled from him as I would from a viper, and had my presence not been imperatively demanded at Winchtown the next day I should have declined his services; but as I was obliged to make the best of it, I at once sprang on my horse, saying, "And so, stranger, you know the road to Winchtown?"

"Yes," was the single response.

"Lead on then; I am ready."

My lank guide gave his lank steed a cut with a switch he carried, and dashed off at a round pace.

"Do you live in Winchtown?" I asked, by the way of beginning conversation.

"Yes," was the simple rejoinder.

"Have you heard of any of the troubles there between the squatters and those who have recently purchased land in that vicinity?"

The man glanced up at me with a more wicked expression than before. That glance told me as plainly as words could speak that I should keep on my guard.

"There will be trouble if the government attempts to drive from their lands those who have settled thereon," was the reply, in more words than I had heard him speak since I had set eyes on him.

A little past noon we came upon a little deserted hut, standing beside a small stream, and I gave the signal to halt to my companion, who was still in advance.

Dismounting, we tethered our horses so that they might crop the rank grass which grew in abundance, and then we went to the bank of the stream and seated ourselves to partake of the lunch my knapsack contained.

"How far are we from Winchtown?" I asked, when for full ten minutes we had been trying to satisfy the inner man.

"Ten miles."

"Is the road better from here?"

"Worse."

"How long will it take us to reach there?"

"Three hours."

Almost provoked at the answers I had received, I made up my mind that I would question my lank companion no more; and soon after I rose and walked toward the cabin to get a look at the inside. My companion still retained his seat, with a quantity of food still before him, not raising his eyes as I left him, but a backward glance, as I went around the corner of the cabin, showed them bent full upon me with the same expression I had disliked so much before.

The door of the cabin was slightly ajar, and, pushing it open, I entered, and a strange sense of desolation met my gaze. The apartment had not been inhabited for perhaps a year, but the occupants had left everything behind them. The bed stood in one corner, the tables in another, and three or four chairs were scattered about, while opposite the entrance a small mirror hung on the wall. Everything, were it not for a light green mold that had overspread the surface, looked as though the former occupants had merely gone out, and might return at any moment. Without the sun was pouring down its rays with a heat that was quite uncomfortable, and, finding it cool and comfortable within the cabin, I threw myself into one of the chairs, with my back to the door, and facing the glass that hung on the wall. Almost before I was aware of it, I had fallen into a sort of doze, and was half unconscious of my surroundings.

How long I remained in this condition I do not know. It might have [illegible] fifteen minutes or more. I [illegible] start, and a sort of undefined feeling of terror, as if some great danger was menacing me. The first thing my eye met was the glass upon the wall, arranged at such an angle that it showed my whole person and the chair on which I was sitting. My first glance revealed this, and the next an object that caused my heart to [illegible] throb of alarm and almost paralyzed me with horror.

Beneath the chair in which I was sitting lay coiled a monster rattlesnake, its head elevated about a foot, and waving to and fro with the motion with which they are said to charm their victims.

So horror-stricken was I at the sight that had it been to save my life I could not have stirred from my seat; and to have done so or to have moved a limb would have been a signal for the reptile to fasten his fangs into my leg, now not one foot from his swaying head. Should I move it ever so slightly I knew that it would be only to receive the deadly blow; and so fascinated was I that I was incapable of making the attempt. All I had the power to do was to gaze into the glass and watch each motion of my terrible enemy, and to hope each moment that my guide, wondering at my long absence, would come to my relief. Now, the gleam of his eyes that I disliked so much I would have hailed with joy, for it was far preferable to the glitter of those eyes shining out from the crested head beneath my chair. To cry out, to call him to my assistance, I dare not do. There was no alternative but to sit there motionless until my guide should come in search of me.

Never before had I known the moments to drag so slowly; and never once in all these moments did I take my eyes from the glass where I saw reflected the never ceasing motion of the reptile beneath my seat.

Suddenly the door opened a little way, and I saw reflected in the glass the face of my guide. Had I thought it evil-looking once, it was now doubbly so, for it accorded well with a murderous-looking knife he held in his hand. One glance assured me that I had another enemy to contend with, as malignant and as deadly as the one beneath my seat. Noiselessly the villian stepped into the room, and on tip-toe approached where I was sitting.

A moment more and the blow might descend. Still I stirred not. Two deaths stared me in the face, and I knew not which to choose.

Suddenly the attention of the snake was attracted to the approach of the wretch, who was now close upon me, so close that his arm was uplifted to strike the fatal blow. Now had come my first chance for life, and with a bound I sprang from my chair, at the same time drawing my pistol. A shrill rattle sounded about the room, mingled with a terrible cry, as the reptile fastened its fangs deep into the villain's leg. I was saved by a rattlesnake!

For a moment the doomed man seemed incapable of motion, the next with a blow he severed the head of the snake from its body, and, grasping the head, he pulled the fangs from the flesh and hurled it against the wall; and then without a word or look sprang from the cabin.

I followed as quickly as possible and called out to him to stop; but without paying the least attention, he sprang upon the back of his lank steed, and, striking it a fierce blow, he dashed away at a speed which defied pursuit.

Before nightfall I reached Winchtown in safety, when I found that my guide had reached there an hour before, and lay dying in a cabin a little apart from the village.

West India Superstitions.

It is very unlucky to tell the name of a boat before it is launched. I recollect once when a worthy old creole, a connection of the French savant Geoffrey St. Hilaire, and who, as I hope, still owns a small island in the Grenadines, was about to launch a sloop, I asked what name he proposed to give it. He led me to where I could see a strip of canvas covering the stern, and told me it was not good to tell the name before the vessel was afloat. A calabash turned upside down in a boat is a sure forerunner of ill-luck either in weather or fishing. The oil obtained from a shark's liver rubbed over the skin is a protection against the attack of a shark. Fish brought into a place where arrowroot or other starch is being prepared prevents a proper separation of the starch sediment from the impurities suspended in the water used. To turn your boots upside down brings loss of money, and to open an umbrella in a house prevents your ever marrying. Never wash your hands in water which another person has used, unless you first make the sign of the cross over it. When a glass cracks suddenly in a house, it foretells a death, and a horse stopping before a house and neighing is also a sign of death. If a cock crows in a house a stranger may be expected. In the South American colonies no good Catholic cuts a banana across. The fruit when so cut shows a mark which is thought to resemble a crucifix. The number of years it will take before a pine plant bears fruit depends on the number of "chops" given with the hoe before placing the plant in the ground. Black people, as a rule, before drinking pour a small quantity of the liquid on the ground. "When hen drink she lift she head to God and say, 'Tank you,' when man drink he drink and says nuffin."

The Question of Lineage.

"What I am going to remark," observed the old man as Elder Toot quietly dropped off to dream of the canefield of the olden time, "am to de effect dat dis club doan keer two cents whedder a member's gran'fadder was hung for wakin' up a policeman asleep on his beat, or sot in de halls of Congress wid his hat on his ear an' his fam elbowin' ober ebery county in de land. It am not de dead gran'fadder but de libin' member dat we has to do wid. If Brudder Shin's great uncle was King of de Cannibal Islands dat doan' help Samuel to pay his rent or buy his 'taters. Whalebone Hawker may trace his blood back to an emper[illegible] who owned 10,000 mules, but Whalebone will pay a fine of $3 ebery time he spits on the stove, same as de res' of you. Boomerang Johnson could no doubt establish de fact dat he am descended from a household which could pay a milk-bill widout havin' to pawn de side-board, but it am nebertheless sartin dat Brudder Johnson won't have any pancakes grow cold on his table dis winter.

"Judge a man as you find him, an' doan' forgit dat de son of a Senator kin display all de meanness expected of the son of a convict. If dar am any member in dis club who wants his lineage traced back six or seben thousan' y'ars to see whether his relashuns took fust or second cabin passage in de ark, or wants his blood strained to see if it am blue or red, let him go ahead; but at de same time I feel it my dooty to warn all sich pussons dat it am fur cheaper to buy 10 cent gimlet an' hire a 5 cent boy to bore a hole in de top of yer head an' let de wanity blow itself off. De Seckretary will now call de roll an' make out a list of sich members as want to trace deir blood back to Ham."

The roll was called, and not one member of the 160 present responded. When the call had been finished Professor Kussforth Parker arose and asked if there was any objection to his taking steps to find out whether his grandfather was a poet or a blacksmith.

"Dar am!" was the prompt reply, "kase it would be a loss of time. I knowed de ole man myself, and I kin inform you dat he was nuffin' but a werry common niggar, who wouldn't do an hour's work in a week onless kicked to it. I also remember dat he was squint-eyed, and had heels so long dat he could w'ar his butes hind side afore."

The Professor weaved to and fro for a moment and then fell back in a dead faint, and it took four members to carry him to the ante-room and steal his pocket-knife and plug tobacco and restore him to consciousness by shouting "mad-dog!" down the back of his neck.—Detroit Free Press.

Is It a Ghost?

Cincinnati Enquirer.

A gentleman well known in this city, who for short will be called Brown, was almost scared out of his senses night before last by what he regarded as spirit rappings. He lives in the same house in which he has resided for six years. He has no family except his wife, a handsome lady of 36. He is on the road traveling a great deal of the time, and in his absence his wife and servant are left alone. The wife has often told him during the past three years of unusual noises heard around the house while he was away, but he never gave the matter any thought.

One night a little over two years ago, during the absence of Mr. Brown, the wife was awakened by the sound of heavy footfalls in the dining-room, immediately below. They were plain and unmistakable, like the tread of a man walking up and down the room in great excitement. Every step was heard distinctly, and the monotonous tramp, tramp continued for fully ten minutes. Mrs. Brown at first thought that her husband had returned and was perpetrating a joke on her, but a tremendous knock, as from a giant's fist, on the dining-room door dissipated the delusion, and, frightened nearly out of her senses, the poor woman covered her head with the bed-clothes and waited in fear and trembling for further developments. Often after that many uncanny noises were heard in different parts of the house, but more generally in the bedroom of Mrs Brown.

Manifestations have been more frequent the past two or three weeks, and as Mr. Brown feelingly informed the reporter, the unknown has "raised the devil." On Wednesday night he had considerable writing to do and sat down to accomplish it. At half-past 9 o'clock his wife said she was tired and would go to bed, and going into her bed-room closed the door and proceeded to disrobe. She had not been in the room ten minutes when the rapping commenced, each time by three knocks—first at the window, then on the mirror in the dressing case, and then on the headboard of the bed. They came in such quick succession and with such frequency that she went out into the hall where her husband was at work and told him what she had heard. He immediately arose and led his wife back into the room, put her to bed and remained a little time with her to quiet her fears. As usual with his appearance the knocking ceased. After sitting for some five minutes he withdrew and partly closed the door, but stood there a moment to listen for a repetition of the noise. He had his ear close up to the door, when suddenly there came a thud against it that sounded as if produced by a powerful blow from a clenched fist. He recoiled in astonishment, and then recovering himself opened the door and looked to see the source, but found no one there. Partly closing it again he stepped out and tried it over, with the same result, attended with slighter manifestations at the headboard of the bed, three in rapid succession, repeated every twenty of thirty seconds. After satisfying himself that they were really rappings of some supernatural order he became thoroughly alarmed and lay awake almost the entire night, wondering when he would be picked up and carried out by the unknown.

Mr. Brown and wife are both unbelievers in spiritualism, and are lost in wonderment that their peace and quiet should be thus molested. He intends to change his residence at once and see if he cannot get rid of the manifestations.

A Woman Rescues a Boy in Mid Ocean.

Sydney Morning Herald.

A short time ago, Mrs. G. A. D. McArthur Campbell, formerly a resident of Coonamble, distinguished herself by a deed of admirable bravery. Mrs. Campbell was a passenger in a steamer from Hong Kong to one of the northern ports of Queensland, and one day a little boy about four years of age, to whom the lady was much attached, fell overboard, the accident occurring through a sudden lurch of the vessel. With the exception of Mrs. Campbell and the man at the wheel all the passengers and crew were at dinner.

Without waiting for a life buoy or divesting herself of any clothing, and simply saying to the man at the wheel, "Don't tell the child's mother," Mrs. Campbell plunged into the water, swam to the boy, and held him up till both were rescued, the steamer having been promptly stopped and a boat lowered. Neither the lady nor the boy was much the worse for the immersion.

Wine and Wine Drinking.

The California Demokrat says that, notwithstanding the large dimensions which wine culture has attained in California, the American resident of that State has failed as yet to take to wine drinking as a habit. The Napa valley is filled with luxuriant vineyards, but foreigners remark with surprise that on entering the inns of that section of the State they not only look about in vain to see wine drinkers, but are not always sure of being able to get wine to drink themselves. Strong liquors are still staple beverages. Grapes are not much in demand, even for table use. The traveler would never suppose from the food and drink of the people that he was in a country where luscious grapes were grown and good wines made.

A NEW ENGLAND ROMANCE.

Interesting Case in a Connecticut Court—The Story of a School-Master who went to the Mexican War.

A Norwich special has the following: A romantic case has been brought to the attention of the Superior Court in this county. A year or two previous to the Mexican war, Benjamin F. Brown, a competent schoolmaster, 21 years old, son of a well-to-do farmer, John Brown, of North Stonington, ran away from home. His parents never received any tidings from him. He went to Mexico, and in the war that began soon afterwards served in a regiment of United States dragoons. As he spoke spanish fluently, he soon became interpretor on General Taylor's staff. After the close of hostilities he went to Corpus Christi, and married a beautiful Spanish girl, Innocente Castillo. The couple went to Laredo, Texas, and there lived happily until 1866, when Borwn, who had changed his name after the close of the Mexican war to Benjamin F. Wrowan, was murdered by brigands. He left a wife and four children—Frank, Benjamin, Juan and Isebella. During his married life he had spoken only spanish in his household, and his family, who knew nothing of English, were unacquainted with his real name or history prior to his marriage. At about the time that Wrowan was killed, his aged father in North Stonington died, leaving his farm, worth $10,000 or $15,000, to six heirs, including the missing Benjamin and his brother John, the latter of whom had settled in Stonington, Ills. In 1873 the heirs to the North Stonington proprety had it sold by order of the Superior Court, and the portion due each was properly assigned, with the exception of Benjamin's share. That was deposited in the Chelsea Savings Bank of that city, in the name of Jeremiah Halsey, Trustee. At the same time a copy of the court order was sent to the latest known address of Benjamin. As the family of the dead man were living under a false name, the order never reached them.

In 1881 Frank, the oldest son of Benjamin's widow, determined to learn English so as to understand the contents of his father's papers. After getting a smattering of English he found among his father's private documents a letter from the Illinois brother that furnished the first clew to Wrowan's early history. The letter was dated Stonington, Ill., November 16, 1858, and was signed "Your Brother John." It spoke of the writer's aged parents in this country, and of their lifelong sorrow over Benjamin's early disappearance. The boy Frank at once wrote to the Illinois Postmaster, asking about John Wrowan. The reply was that there was no such person, but that a man had lived and died in Stonington, Christian county, Ill., named John Brown, and that he came from North Stonington, Conn. The boy then wrote to the Postmaster at North Stonington, and established, in his own opinion, the fact that his father was B. F. Brown. Through Mr. Halsey, the trustee of Benjamin's share of the Brown estate, Frank secured the services of lawyers in this city to present the claim of the Wrowan family to their portion of the of the Brown estate. A hearing was heard last week before Chief Justice Park, of the Superior Court, and a petition in equity granted. It is probable that the heirs of the late B. F. Wrowan will soon come into possion of their share of the Brown estate.

Some Quaint Ornaments.

St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"Just home from Paris. See what I brought my wife," was the salutation a Post-Dispatch reporter received from an acquaintance engaged in the wholesale jewelry trade.

"An alligator? You could have got that in St. Louis."

"Well, examine it before you proceed to criticise."

The monster was of Roman gold, with ruby eyes and a flat link in its nose. Four small diamonds were embedded perpendicularly down the back of the neck, the last one almost meeting a like row of jewels, which ran out into the tail graduating in width. Other rows were set on either side, making the entire back a mass of diamonds. While examining this fine piece of work the reporter's finger came in contact with a small spring in the alligator's tail, when the gem-encrusted back raised itself by a hinge at the neck, disclosing the face of a watch about as large as a gold dollar. The merchant then pressed another spring beneath, which laid open the interior, a perfect system of minute works, with a stem-winder detached.

An odd-looking breastpin was then shown as being the forerunner of the chance coming in pins after so long a season of the straight lace-pin. It represented in Roman gold the front of an old-fashioned woven straw basket, out of which peeped the heads of two long-haired poodles on either side of the handle, to the top of which a ribbon of blue enamel was attached. These dog heads were of silver, set solid with the small rose diamonds, of which it takes 500 to weigh a carat. Tongues of pink enamel, ruby eyes for one, and emeralds for the other, completed the [illegible]. A scarf-pin representing the full moon—or an original design of this house—was of dead gold with satin finish, dirmonds, a sapphire, and a ruby, representing, respectfully, eyes, nose and mouth. A crescent of polished gold, holding a Mexican fire opal between its horns, has a mova[illegible] pin and pendant link, so that it [illegible] be wound either way.

"I know [illegible] who has a passion for fine diamonds," said another dealer in gems. "He wears a four-carat diamond in his collar-button, a brilliant pair of pure white stone studs, and a large solitaire set in a ring of polished gold. These, with a curious locket I made him, cost about $8,000. The locket is a plain oval of gold, enameled on the front in solid black. A four-carat diamond is set in deep in the center, and opposite it, on the back, is a fine ruby, which, when the light touches it, always gives a blood-red center-point to the diamond, and of course attracts attention. I have just finished a necklace of seventeen large cushioned-shaped diamonds underset in silver. It is an imitation of the one which the late Adelaide Neilson purchased for $10,000 in London, and which she wore in preference to the rosette necklace represented in so many of her pictures. She once detected a flaw in a stone I showed her by merely blowing her breath upon it."

Why He Didn't Explain.

Detroit Free Press.

Some eight or ten years ago a silvery-tongued chap who claimed to be a fruit-tree agent swindled the farmers of this county in a shameful manner, and one resident in Naken was so mad about it that he came to Detroit, searched the rascal out, and gave him a pounding on the street. After he got through his work he told the fellow that he would lick him twice as bad if he ever put eyes on him again, and it was a threat to be remembered and nursed. About three weeks ago the Naken man was traveling in Washtenaw county, and as he journeyed along the highway he met a traveler who so closely resembled the fruit-tree swindler that he halted and called out:

"Here you are again, you bold-faced rascal!"

"Yes, I am here," was the calm reply.

"Well, so'm I, and I'm going to lick you till you can't holler! I said I'd do it, and I always keep my word. Climb down here!"

The stranger "clum!" without a protest, shedding his coat as he struck the ground, and a fight began. In about two minutes he had used up the farmer and was coolly replacing his ocat.

'See here," said the man from Naken as he wiped his nose with a burdock, "you fight better than you did eight years ago."

"Well, I dunno. This is my first affair with you."

"Didn't I wollop you in front of the Detroit postoffice eight years ago?"

"No, sir? I was in Australia up to a year ago."

"And you never saw me before?"

"Never."

"Well, I'll be hanged?" Come to look at you I can see that you are not the man! Why on earth didn't you explain or ask me to? You must have thought me mistaken."

"Oh, yes, I knew you were mistaken, but I had just discovered that I had driven seven miles on the wrong road and was wishing some one would come along and give me two words of sass. I didn't want any explanations about it. A rotten sweet apple will cure that black eye in three or four days, and salt and water will tighten your front teeth in a week or so. I feel fifty per cent. better, and I'm ever so much obliged. So long to you."

Two Friends and Their Sister Wives.

Atlanta Constitution.

Dr. R. W. Lovett lives in Screven county and Judge Thomas M. Merriwether lives in Newton. They were schoolmates. They first married twin sisters, daughters of Bishop Andrew. Their wives died, and they then married two other sisters, also daughters of a bishop, Bishop Price. These wives died, and they then married a third pair of sisters, not daughters of a bishop, but two sisters—being the daughters of Mr. Smith, of Greene county. With these last sisters they are living happily.

Curious, Useful and Scientific.

Iron chess-boards and chessmen with concealed magnets to steady them are sold in Berlin for the convenience of travelers.

Incandescent electric lighting with the Swan system has proved highly satisfactory in the Paris Opera House. The use of gas in the foyer destroyed almost entirely the fine decorations.

"Tripolite" is the name given to a new building material which is intended to be a substitute for lime, cement and plaster under certain circumstances. It is composed of sulphate of lime, coke and oxide of iron in some form or other.

An old Hungarian miller is reported to have given this rule for telling a good mill-stone: "When about to select a stone take a flask of gin and pour a little of it upon the stone; if the surface absorbs the liquor so that it appears dry it is a good one, but if the gin remains on the surface the stone is good for nothing."

Lime mud formed as a waste product in caustic manufacture is converted to a useful substance in this way: It is put into a chamber having a stirrer and a movable filtering bottom. Steam is let in, and, passing through the mud, drives out the moisture and alkali [illegible]. The bottom [illegible] the dry cake of carbonate of lime is tilted into a wagon and used in place of limestone in the black ash furnace.

Carefully conducted experiments have demonstrated the fact that seasoned wood, well saturated with oil when put together will not shrink in the dryest weather. Boiled [illegible] oil is the best for general use although it is now known that crude petroleum [illegible] old wheels is of [illegible] benefit.

Bishop [illegible] the laying of the corner-stone of a new Church not long since, made the following point: "Our answer to those who assert that Christianity is dying out is simply this: We build more Churches. The [illegible] not build [illegible] builds no Churches, [illegible] no asylums, endows no universities. Unbelief provides no refuge for the infirm and poor, nor furnishes help nor comfort for those who weep."

At a recent convention of Episcopal clergymen held at New Haven, an interesting discussion took place on the subject of healing physical maladies by the exercise of prayer and faith. It was opened by an essay by the Rev. Mr. Witherspoon, who took extreme ground in favor of faith healing especially through the agency of anointing oil. Another clergyman denied the soundness of this view and good-humoredly ridiculed the idea of a miracle being performed by the olive oil of commerce, as tending to a low materialism.

Rev. Mr. Foster, of Jersey City, has made exceptional success with his Sunday evening praise-and-prayer service of song. It is simply a relaxation from the accustomed habit of stiffly singing these hymns and sandwiching between them a chapter of the Bible and a very long prayer. Mr. Foster has found that by giving the people a part in the service of song they become greatly interested in it. His large church, the "Tabernacle," is entirely filled on Sunday evenings. With a powerful choir, a hearty invitation for the people to unite, and a pleasant shortening prayer and preaching, the service is thoroughly adapted to the masses. Some such easily managed improvement as this might have the effect of filling up the empty pews of many churches which by their rigidity have nearly frozen their congregations to death.

THE LION.

How the King of Beasts Kills His Prey.

London Field.

I once had a rare chance of seeing a lion catch and kill his prey in the open daylight. While on a short hunt to the north of Waterberg, in the Transvaal, in the winter of 1874, with a Dutch Boer, we saddled up one afternoon to shoot a couple of quaggas (Burchells zebra) for our followers, quagga meat being preferred above all others by the niggers of that country. We had ridden a considerable round without falling in with any, but about an hour before sundown we came across a troop of about fifty. Galloping up within shot, we fired, when one mare dropped. Reloading, and mounting, we started after the troop, which had now disappeared over a ridge. On gaining the rise, we saw the quaggas tailing out in the hollow and commencing to ascend a second slope, one or two stallions bringing up the rear, as is usually the case. Cantering on, my companion suddenly pulled up and pointed out to me a lion trotting swiftly up across the quagga's line of retreat, behind a few scattered boulders and low bushes dotting the slope, evidently with the intention of securing his supper. We moved slowly forward, when the hindmost stallion, thinking we were getting too close, started after his companions at a smart canter. It was now exciting. The quagga was close to the line of the lion's approach; a couple of seconds more and the dark mass of the lion's form shot out from behind a stone on his prey. In a moment the quagga was on the ground. The lion left him instantly, moved a few yards distant, and lay down with his head away from the quagga, twitching his tail nervously from side to side, as much as to say, "I have done that properly." The whole thing was done so quickly and sudddenly that it is difficult to describe. The lion had not yet seen us, but, riding nearer, he turned and faced, looking rather put out at our appearing on the scene. At first he seemed inclined to bolt, but at last lay down, facing us, evidently unwilling to give up his game. Being anxious to examine the quagga, and knowing my Boer friend to be reliable, we rode up to about fifty yards and dismounted. I held the horses, keeping my double rifle in reserve in case of accident. The lion, not liking the look of things, got up and walked a few steps toward us, growling savagely. I told the Boer to shoot straight, which he did, hitting the lion with his old six-to-the-pound on the point of the shoulder, the bullet passed out behind the other shoulder, dropped the lion on the spot. On examining the quagga it would appear from the claw mark that the lion's left forearm was thrown over the wither and the claws fixed in the shoulder; the right forearms's claws in the chest; the left hind claw had been driven into the flank a little below the level of the hip-bone, the right hind foot evidently on the ground, thus holding the animal as in a vise, while the teeth had met in the neck about three inches or four inches behind the ears, smashing the bones as effectually as a two-ounce bullet. My two front fingers met in the bite-hole. Death was instantaneous. The lion was a full-grown male, with perfect teeth. On a previous occasion, a riding mare belonging to a friend of mine, was killed, near Wonderfontein, Transvaal, one night, close to the wagon, while on a blesbok hunt. The mare was hobbled when caught. The claw marks and the bite that killed were identical with those on the quagga. From all testimony that I could gather from old hunters during seventeen years' residence in the Transvaal, and my own limited observation, I would say that the lion uses his claws as a holding power, and kills by bite.

Powerful Mutton.

Dublin Cor. New York Sun.

A friend of mine has been down in the west of Ireland trying trying to collect a few rents. He brought back some money with him, but he got it out of the personal good will that he enjoys of his tenants, and because it was generally understood in his neighborhood that he had returned as poor as when he came. His tenants did not dare pay him openly. While he was down there he met the custodian of the local reformatory institution, in whose care were a lot of the so-called "suspects." This good soul was burdened with care, and confided to him the story of his troubles.

"There's no objection," he said, "to their havin' a glass o' spirits regular, an' begorra they're all able to pay for it; but about two weeks ago it sthruck me that there was more of an inthertainment in thim cells whin they got their dinner than I cud undherstand. The first I noticed uv it was Reilly singin' the 'Shan-van-voght' every afthernoon, an' he an's ugly divve anyhow. So ses I to myself, there's nothin' short uv the craythur 'ud make the music rise in that blaggard, an' I wint up to his cell. Divvle a word he had to say whin I come to the dure.

"'Reilly!' ses I.

"Sorra the word out of him.

"'Come here to the dure,' ses I; 'I want to spake wid you!'

"Wid that he kem over to the gratin', face fur all the world like a full moon.

"'Y'er dhrunk!' ses I.

"'Ye lie!' ses he.

"'Y'er breath 'ud give the D. T.'s to a cow, this minit,' ses I.

"'Sorra I can care,' ses he, an' goes an' lies down on the bed.

"I knew it'd be the ruin of me if it was found out, so I got the boys and sarched all the cells, but the divvie recave the dhrap we found.

"Begorra, the next day the whole of thim was singin' choruses all the evening, every one of them as dhrunk as fiddlers!

"Be me sowl but I was put to me wits' end to know what the matther was, an' we sarched all the cells, turned over matthresses an' every blessed thing, but sorra ha'porth cud we find but the smell, which was powerful an' good. Divvle such a highlarous set o' boys I ever had in the place before! What wid the singin' an' the language of them, ye'd swear ye were in Jude's!

"The next day I took a look at the dinner goin' in, and a mighty good-lukin' dinner it was, all served on dishes kept warm be hot wather. There was a nice dish o' herrins as ever ye seen, smokin' hot, an' a jint runnin' gravy all over a big dish, an' an elegant bit o' bacon sittin in a taste o' greese, an' as fine a dish o' pittaties as I hope ever to have before me, but divvle a dhrop to dhrink!

"Well, sir, as I'm a sinner, it wasn't half an hour before every one of them blaggards was blind dhrunk, singin' an' raisin the divvle! Up I wint an' expostulayted wid them. They wasn't amaynable to rayson, but all at once I seen Reilly rowl the remains of the leg o' mutton off the dish, wipe out the plug where ye put in the hot wather, and turn the end of the dish up under his nose! That was enough for me. Divvle another word I said, but when the dinner came the next day I dhrained out every one of thim dishes; an' a smeechiner, hotter nor sthronger punch than was warmin' them never crossed the lips of a parish priest!

"Holy mother, but it was fine! An' between you an' me an' the wall, I have a strong suspicion that the jail locked itself up the same night. Sorra much I knew about it till I woke up in the mornin' wid May batin' me over the head wid a suggawn!"

From all of which it would appear that life has it compensations in Ireland as well as elsewhere.

Advantages of the Corset

New York Tribune.

Dr. Chadwick believes a woman is in better health when wearing a proper-fitting corset, and less liable to suffer from consumption, dyspepsia or spinal curvature, but he deprecates the beginning of tight-lacing suddenly. "What I consider to be perfection in the application of the corset to the female figure or to the male," he says, "is to begin early in life, say at the age of seven or ten years, and then only with very yielding materials, permitting the corset simply to touch the contour of the body, though a little firmer at the waist. As the girl grows up and the chest expands, the bust of the corset may be properly made larger, the waist at the same time being kept within bounds. If such a system be carried out, there never would be any undue pressure anywhere, and the girl who reaches womanhood will possess the perfection of a figure with its round and taper waist, broad shoulders and well-developed chest. It always and will be necessary to restrain limit and correct the growing figure. Without aid nature seldom forms a good waist. Gradual and early correction, instead of violent and sudden reduction of deformity, is the way to achieve success—no evil effects can possibly ensue. In wearing of the corset, the degree of comfort with which it is borne should be the test of utility. Early care and judicious managment will in every case succeed in attaining elegance and in preserving health."

The Only Law Not Violated.

Mary Jane's Letter.

The suburbs of Newport are called the Highlands, and here some delightful homes are to be found. Just overlooking the city is a fine old baronial hall, where lives Col. Thomas L. Jones, a possible Governor of Kentucky.

"What is the "L" in his name for?" said Dickey.

"People say," said I, "that it is for 'Lovely,' but I know better. The 'L' is for 'Lordly'—Thomas Lordly Jones.'

"Wasn't he ever Governor?" said Dickey.

"No," said I.

"Why?" asked she.

"Because," said I, "somebody else got it, and there is a well-known law in physics or statics, or something of that sort, which is in effect that two bodies cannot occupy the same space at the same time, and this law can't be violated."

"'Can't it?" said Dickey. Then it isn't like any other law in Kentucky, that's all I've got to say about it."

The British Soldier's "Kit."

From the New York Hour.

The Egyptian campaign has shown once more the improvement which has been achieved in the modern equipment of soldiers. There was a time when an English warrior on the Marde went under a burden very nearly resembling the family trunk, and when it seemed no doubt a matter of necessity to buckle and strap him up very tightly indeed in order to prevent his going to pieces under it. It is astonishing that in those old days of throttling-stocks and tight belts and crushing burdens the British soldier could fight so well as he did, and perhaps if the enemy had not his own little handcaps in the way of dress and equipment, the British soldiers never would have got on so well. A deal of attention has been given of late to reducing the weight of the soldier's impedimenta to a minimum. Not an ounce of anything is carried unnecessarily. The old knapsack has given place the modern valise, which is considerably lighter and more convenient and comfortable. Every article carried in this receptanle has been subject of careful consideration, more especially in the case of infantry with whom, of course, weight is of more importance than with cavalry. As an illustration of the importance attached to this point, the foot soldier is not allowed a hair brush, though the cavalry man having a horse to carry it for him, is indulged with this luxury. Then, again, the foot soldier on home service has a razor and shaving brush, and is expected to use them; on setting out upon active service he is obliged to leave them behind, and allow the hair to grow on his face, if it will. On returning home, however, he must resume the shaving of his chin, though he may have grown proud of his crop. The use of the tooth brush implies a degree of refinement to which it is assumed that Private Tompkins has not yet attained, and as neither the external appearance of the British army nor its fighting efficiency is promoted by its use, the tooth brush forms no part of a private soldier's kit. Still the private soldier is pretty well off for brushes. He has a blacking brush, a polishing brush, a clothes brush, a brass brush, a shaving brush, and, if a cavalry man, a hair brush. For the cavalry also a lace brush is found necessary.

Besides the items already mentioned, the infantry kit proper comprises articles of about 20 different kinds. To begin with, there is a badge for the forage cap, a knit bag for use on a furlough, a tin of blacking and a pair of braces. There is a little article known as a "button brass," the use of which would constitute a considerable riddle to the uninitiated. It is a little thin slip of brass, with a slit part way down the middle. When buttons are cleaned this little article is slipped under each, the shank of the button passing up the slit. This keeps the coat from being soiled in the process. A knife and fork are articles comprised in the kit at home, but on proceeding to active service these are given up, and a stout pocket-knife is substituted. This has to serve for knife and fork and for any other purposes that may turn up. A spoon, however, is added for use at meals, and for a plate the lid of the mess tin has to serve. This mess tin is an ingenious little contrivance carried on the top of the valise in a little cover, also forming an item of "kit." The tin is a little receptacle somewhat in the shape of the letter D for infantry, but round for cavalry. The lid takes off and serves for a plate, then a little tray lifts out and a handle unfolds, and the soldier has an efficient little frying-pan, while the body of the mess tin is used either for holding water or for boiling food, so that the man has plate, frying-pan and sauce-pan combined. He has, of course, a water bottle in addition, but that article comes under the head of "equipment," and is not reckoned in "kit." Of the rest, there is a small sponge for pipeclay, a comb, a pair of mitts, two flannel shirts, three pair of socks, and two towels. Of soap, a three-pound bar is divided into ten pieces, and each man has a piece dealt out to him. For a sea voyage, a further supply of a kind for use in salt water is given.

A soldier's kit is distinguished from his clothing, for which the government is responsible as long as he remains in the army. He gets two pairs of boots a year, and he also gets a forage cap annually. He gets one tunic, two frock coats, and three pairs of trousers every two years. A helmet he receives once in four years, a greatcoat once in three years. These renewels are at the cost of the country. But the "kit" once supplied has to be kept up by the man himself. He has at frequent intervals to open his valise and lay out its contents for inspection, and anything missing he is required to make good. In order to enable him to keep his clothing and underclothing in proper repair, a "housewife is added to his outfit. This is a little strip of cloth or flannel, or any material of a simillar nature, properly made up to contain two dozen buttons, a thimble, two worsted needles, a dozen sewing needles, two balls of worsted, and half an ounce each of black, white and red thread. It is a pretty and touching sight to see Private Tomkins—from his early youth upward reared to the management of the plow and pitchfork—trying his hand at the first big hole in a pair of socks or at a rent in his coat. The repairing of boots, it may be added, is a matter with which a regimental shoemaker is charged, but every man has to be his own tailor and laundress, provision being made for the supply of such patches and pieces as the accidents of a soldier's life may give occasion for.

England's Millionaire Duke.

San Francisco Chronicle.

The Duke of Westminister, who was recently married to Lady Catherine Cavendish, is one of the wealthiest men in the world. He comes of an ancient family which crossed the channel with the Conqueror, but it is a family which acquired no distinction, save as great landlords with fat rent rolls, until the present century, when the first earl, Grosvenor, gained a reputation as a supporter of the British turf, and the second earl, by siding with the reformers in 1831, gave the family the liberal biats, which it still preserves. The third earl and present duke succeeded in 1869 his father, who was so avaricious that when the Great Eastern was launched some London wit suggested that it be named the Marquis of Westminister, because it was the "greatest screw in existence."

The present Duke is credited with owning 19,437 acres which bring in a nominal rent of £37,000, while he has expectations of succeeding to his mother's estate, which yields nearly as much again. But his main claim to great wealth rests in his London property. He owns entire blocks in the fashionable west end of London, the rentals from which now amount to an enormous sum, and will be greatly increased at the end of this century, when the present leases expire. The duke has numerous town and country houses, a magnificent library, the finest private collection of manuscript in the world, and a stable of thoroughbreds, among which are Bend Or, Shotover, Peregrine and other famous flyers. He is very liberal in his charitable gifts, rivaling in this respect the Baroness Burdette-Coutts. His bride is thirty years his junior but this is no uncommon occurrence in his family, as an ancestor of his married at seventy, had five children and lived to the ripe old age of ninety.

Vanderbilt and Gould are counted as wealthy men, but their speculations will have to yield many fold before they keep pace with the increase of the duke of Westminister's London property. The latter proves the oft-repeated assertion that nothing is so sure to increase in value as well selected real estate. The growth of London has been extraordinary, and its present advance in size and wealth is marvelous, but this increase is no more astonishing than that of New York, Chicago, or San Francisco. The solid millionaires of the twentieth century in this country will not be the speculators, but the owners of valuable real estate in the great cities.

The Bloody Work at Ashland.

Cincinnati Gazette.

Better information puts a different face on the affair of the military guard of prisoners and the lynchers at Ashland, Ky., on Wednesday. It was no accidental collision; the military guard had to deal with a truculent mob of rioters, made bold by their superior numbers, and [illegible] by discipline or command, and it had a difficult duty to perform. The mob appeared to think that their purpose to lynch the two alleged murderers justified them in killing the guard; but a military guard of the law is not required to submit to be killed.

A mob which resolves to kill the officers of the law in order to execute a couple of alleged murderers puts itself on the level of the murderers. This is not the pursuit of justice; it is reckless bloodthirstiness.

The military guard kept back the arrived Ashland rioters at Catlettsburg by discipline, and by keeping a line ready for action as they withdrew to the boat. This and the return of the mob to Ashland gave it time to reflect while the boat was coming.

It gave time also to inflate itself to a more ferocious recklessness, and this appears to have been its working. It is not probable that the prisoners could have been taken through Ashland, but a ferry boat filled with the rioters, shows that they had resolved to overcome the guard by whatever means were necessary. They could not expect to do it without killing at least some of the guard, and therefore they had determined to kill.

They fired on the guard, and on the pilot and captain of the boat. Soldiers acting as guardians of the law are under no obligations to hold still to be fired at. Lawbreakers who fire on officers of the law know the consequences. If innocent persons are hurt in the melee, the rioters are guilty of it. But persons who assemble where they know a mob is going to have a collision with the officers of the law are not wholly innocent.

Governor Blackburn stated recently that the militia were sent on the requisition of Judge Brown. The event proves the need.

There was nothing in the case that required these men to expose their own lives, nor to take the lives of the officers of the law, in order to execute the alleged murderers. If they examine their motive they will find that it was not so much a desire for justice as a spirit of lawlessness. The affair is deplorable, but it appears that they who defied the law are alone to blame.

DR HARTER'S

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice. DR. ROBERT SAMUELS, ST. LOUIS, MO., NOV. 28th, 1881. 300 Wash. Av.

It gives color to the blood, natural healthful tone to the digestive organs and nervous system, making it applicable to General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Prostration of Vital Powers and Impotence.

County Teachers' Institute.

NOW IN SESSION AT WATERLOO.

The institute was called to order at 1:30 p. m. by Supt. Barns. After singing by the choir, prayer was offered by Rev. Butler of the U. B. church. Organization was effected by electing J. A. McIntyre secretary and Miss Hattie Smith assistant secretary. The superintendent then made a few appropriate remarks, on the work before us, and then introduced Mr. B. B. Harrison principal of the Waterloo schools, who gave the first lesson. His subject was "Diagrams in Grammar", a subject in which he was thoroughly versed, and which was ably handled. This is to be his work throughout the week. He was followed by Mr. H. E. Coe, of the same school, who brought out a new form for working the problems in extraction of the square root. The method developed was a clear and concise statement of the work arranged by steps, so as to be easy for beginners. The next lesson, was by M. W. Harrison principal of the Auburn schools, who spoke on the subject of the "Relation of Physiology to the schools." His ideas were good, and were listened to with attention. Adjourned to meet at 7:30 in the evening. Dr. Russell's lecture in the evening was well attended, and very interesting. His subject was "digestion" and was illustrated by charts and still more fully by a manikin. Perhaps no better lecture has ever been delivered to the teachers of the county. It will prove a valuable assistant to the teachers in understanding the usually dry subject of physiology. Music was furnished by a choir composed of Misses Lydia North, Emma Fisher, Hattie Dickinson, Jennie Leib, Carrie Ward, Emma Ward, John Fisher, Wilson Shull and Samuel Till. They did themselves great credit and added greatly to the institute. Number enrolled first day 80. Tuesday's session began with a lesson in grammar, by B. B. Harrison, a continuation of the work he began on Monday. The next exercise was a discussion of the subject of history, by Prof. D. D. Luke, principal of the Ligonier schools. This was the first of a series of lectures on this subject and in this he laid down the plan he would pursue in teaching it. His talk was replete with sound views. Then followed a lesson in arithmetic by C. M. Merica, principal of the Garrett schools. In this he illustrated his method of teaching pupils how to make statements in compound proportion. Then followed brief talks by Mr. Cline, of Valparaiso, and Cyrus Smith, of Indianapolis. In the afternoon, Mr. Coe resumed his work in arithmetic, showing good methods to use in the five cases of percentage and their applications. Miss Vineyard then came forward and introduced the work she expects to do during the week. It was done in her usual brilliant and happy manner. D. D. Luke then continued his lesson on the subject of history and methods of teaching it. Then followed Dr. Russell's second lecture, subject: "The Brain." It was listened to with attention. His lectures are proving of great value to those who study physiology as the work is so practical. The evening lecture was by D. D. Luke, subject: "The Force of Prejudice." He went to Angola on Wednesday to assist in the institute there. He is doing good work and working a good impression wherever he goes. The number enrolled Tuesday evening exceeded 100.

The Indiana University at Bloomington, will send out another company for a summer tour to Europe next year. It will be under the management of Prof. D. S. Jorden, assisted by C. H. Gilbert, W. W. Spangler and Julia R. Hughes. The party will leave Indianapolis about the 8th of June, and then at Liverpool about the 18th of the same month. After a trip through Norway, Scotland, Germany, Italy, Switzerland and France, they will spend a few days in England, and return early in September. The expense for the entire trip will be about $350.

A plucky lady in Bluffton got ahead of an impudent tramp last week. He called when the head of the family was absent, and as usual demanded something to eat. Not having his order complied with as soon as he wished, he proceeded to help himself when the lady of the house drew a revolver, and pointing it at him told him to leave. He didn't stay long on the order of his going, but left.

Judge Lowry gets a majority of 3,778 in Allen county, his own home. This is [illegible] ahead of the state ticket and is, we believe, the greatest majority ever given by a single county to any candidate on any ticket in the state of Indiana. It proves the Judge's popularity among those who know him best. His opponent, on the other hand, ran behind 100 votes in his own county.

Garfield Memorial Fund.

THE NATIONAL BAZAAR, ART AND INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION AT WASHINGTON—GRAND PREPARATIONS IN THE CAPITOL BUILDING—REMARKABLY INTERESTING SERIES OF EVENTS AND VERY LOW RAILROAD RATES.

The National Bazaar, Art and Industrial Exposition, which opens in Washington on the 25th, promises to be a very unique thing, inasmuch as it will be the first time the Capitol was ever put to such purposes. The Bazaar is to be held under the auspices of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland, and in the interest of the Garfield Memorial Fund, and none can question the course of congress in permitting the National Capitol to be devoted to so worthy a cause. The work of remodeling the rotunda, the Old Hall of Representatives, and other portions of the main floor, is being rapidly pushed forward to completion, and when all is in readiness the scene presented will be a memorable one. The magnificent rotunda is being converted into a grand art gallery, in which will be displayed very many of the finest paintings owned in the United States. The four centre spaces will be occupied by four of the widest known art establishments in the country, and their displays will rival anything of the character shown at the centennial. Directly in the centre of the rotunda will stand a colossial statue of Garferd, about which choice cut flowers will be most lavishly strewn every day. The Old Hall of Representatives will be given up to State Booths, which will be presided over by beautiful lady representatives of the different States of the Union. These booths will be exquisitely embellished and offer attractions which will not be exceedingly difficult for the sterner sex to resist, but the fairer sex as well. The four executive Departments of the Government — Treasury, War, Navy and Interior—will occupy the centre spaces of this hall, and make thereon a peceliarly interisting exhibit. Special exhibits, booths and other attractions will be located at other points upon the main floor, in the lobbies of the house and senate, and in fact throughout the entire building. Even then the accommodations will not suffice, and the Agricultural Building, with its fifteen thousand square feet of space, will be thrown open to exhibitors. It will be mainly devoted to agricultural exhibits and implement and machinery displays. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company will occupy much room with one of its remarkable displays of products, etc. The fame of this company in this line may fairly be said to be world-wide, as its strikingly brilliant success at the centennial, Cincinnati, Louisville and St. Louis Expositions, not to speak of European centres of similar interest, have gained the admiration of the agricultural public everywhere. Other railway companies of the west will probably vie with the Santa Fe in extent and artistic arrangements of their displays, and certainly no opportunity of witnessing such an exhibition has ever before been offered the farmers of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and other states on the line of the Baltimore and Ohio, its divisions and branches.

The period of the Bazaar and its kindred attractions has been capitally apportioned off for the series of events. For instance, Saturday, the 25th, will be the opening day, and Hon. Stanley Matthews will deliver the oration. Sunday, the 26th, will be Garfield's Memorial Day; Monday, the 27th, Army of the Cumberland and Veteran Day; Wednesday, the 29th, Bicycle Day; Thursday, the 30th, Knight Templar Day and Competitive Drill; Friday, December 1st, Military Day and Competitive Drill; Saturday, the 2d, District of Columbia Day, with grand illumination of Pennsylvania avenue at night; Sunday, the 3d, Closing Day. During the week there will be brilliant receptions every night, and for the out-door day events a monster grand stand has been erected just south of the white house. The bicycle contest, competive drills and the like will take place in front of this stand, which will seat fully ten thousand people.

The B. & O., with characteristic liberality, has ordered very low fares to be made from all points on its main line, divisons and branches. The company's ticket agents everywhere will be found thoroughly posted as to the limit of tickets, where they go on sale, and how long they stay on sale. Also as to time of trains, programme of the Bazaar, and much other interesting and useful information. The extraordinary attractions offered and the exceedingly low railroad rates make this a most desirable time to visit Washington.

Glasgow ran 100 behind his ticket in his own county. This may be taken as showing also, the power of those wheel horses of the democracy who claimed Judge Lowry would get no votes in Lagrange county.

—Dr. LaRue the only reliable specialist in this country, has located at the Auburn House, Auburn, Ind., until March 1, 1883. tf

An Indianapolis dispatch of Nov. 7 states that the discovery has been made that the proposed prohibitory amendment to the constitution is not pendining at all and that the issue upon which the campaign has been fought had no foundation in fact. According to a provision of the constitution any proposed amendments shall be set fourth in the journals of two houses, together with the yeas and nays upon their passage by the legislature. An examination of the journals show that this provision has not been complied with, the introduction into the house of the amendment only being recorded. Thus owing to this omission the work of the legislature of 1881 goes for naught and the advocates of prohibition will have to begin over again.—Ligonier Banner.

Our next legislature will stand: Senate, 28 democrats and 22 republicans. House, 58 democrats, 41 republicans and 1 greenbacker. Our delegation in congress will probably be 9 democrats and 4 republicans. The republican districts are the 6th, 7th, 11th and 13th and will be represented respectively by, Browne, Peele, Steele and Calkins.

The vote now stands nearly as follows, only nine of the states that voted Tuesday giving republican majorities. New York's, is 200,000, Pennsylvania gives Patterson, democratic candidate for governor, nearly 40,000 majority.

Only eight counties in the great state of New York gave republican majorities for govenor. The delegation in congress is 21 democrats and 13 republicans.

The house of representatives in the next congress will probably stand: Democrats 201 and republicans 124—counting the readjusters of Virgina as republicans.

Gerber is elected joint-representatives by a majority in the three counties of 64. Good enough. We predict the people will never be ashamed of him.

The democratic majority in New York, has kept on increasing till it is now nearly, or quite 200,000. This is the largest majority ever given in any state in the Union.

Kansas has elected a democratic governor by a plurality of St. John, the prohibition candidate. There were three tickets in the field.

Elkhart county elects an entire board of democratic commissioners, the clerk and surveyor. The rest of the ticket was republican.

* * *

Now will Dorsey resign his position as secretary of the republican commitee, or wait for another cyclone?

Ben Butler ran 30,000 ahead of his ticket, as the rest of the state ticket went into the hands of the republicans.

Whitley county elects the entire democratic ticket by a majority of about 300

Noble gounty goes republican by about 200

South Carolinia is democratic by a slight majority.

Virginia has gone in favor of the readjusters, which is equivalent to a republican victory.

The full vote of this county will appear in this paper. Keep it for future use.

Peele is elected in the Indianapolis district by less than 100 majority.

—A black horse ten years old and a colt 1½ years old left the premises of Philip Fluke on the 13th, inst. Parties knowing their whereabouts will please shut them up or return to the owner at Auburn, Ind.

—A happy family re-union occurred at the residence of Francis Picker last Sunday in honor of their daughter Mrs Mary Hufferman, of Bowland Green, Ohio. The occasion was a joyous one and will always be remembered.

—Rev. W. F. Matthews was here a day or two last week on his way from a visit to relatives in Michigan to his charge in Bluffton. His wife remained here over Sunday and joined her husband this week in their new home.

—Our democratic exchanges last week were as full of chicken as a minister on quarterly meeting Sunday. Even the republican papers had out a few sickly roosters and tried to laugh over the matter as well as they could.

—Miss Alza Ralston celebrated her thirteenth birthday by inviting the members of her sabbath-school, and of the young ladies' missionary society to spend the afternoon and evening with her. It was a pleasant gathering.

—Its almost certain that our candidate for representative will be chosen speaker of the house the coming term. We hope that Hon. D. D. Moody will be selected as he is just the man suited for the position in every particular.

—Mr. & Mrs. Eaton have been here for a few days visiting in the family of Rev. W. L. Meese. Mrs. Eaton paid a visit to the teachers' institute at Waterloo to renew acquaintances with her former fellow teachers.

—A drunken unbrella repairer occupied the sidewalk oppose the COURIER office yesterday. He mistook the telegraph poles for a republican liberty pole and hugged it with as much affection as a fond mother does her only child.

—Some jealously prevails between our "hightones" in dance circles. One party wishes to be termed the "cultured folks" and the opposite ones ditto. When the music is over and they have all waltzed in one common circle, our readers will be enlightened.

—W. L. Penfield, esq., has been appointed attorney for the Postal Telegraph Company for the state of Indiana. The company have made a choice in their legal counselor that they will never regret as Mr. Penfield ranks among the formost of the state in his profession.

—If those parties who are so vituperative against the COURIER for various reasons would turn over a new leaf and lead upright, virtuous lives, there will be no necessity of us "giving them away." The path of the transgressor is not paved with white marble neither does roses bloom on either side.

—Constable Gangler, at Garrett, was shot in the face while hunting Monday this week. His associate was a fly shootist and while in the act of banging away at a winged animal he missed it just enough to discharge the contents of the gun into Mr. Gangler's neck and face. The wound is painful yet not dangerous.

—Ef. Watson, esq., known better among the farmers as Colonel, handles the grain department at the Wabash elevators more successfully than any man the company could employ. We will give an estimate soon showing our readers what amount of grain is handled in Auburn, notwithstanding some others say we have no market. The best prices paid this season have been received at the Wabash.

—We are indebted to friend Rummel the gentlemanly superintendent of the poor farm for a supply of nice vegetables, including some of the choicest celery ever grown in this section. Mr. Rummel is giving a great deal of attention to the raising of vegetables which he disposes of in town and so adds greatly to the revenues of the county farm. All who need these articles would do well to see him when they lay in a supply for winter.

Gray hair may be made to take on its youthful color and beauty by the use of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer, the best preparation for the hair known to the science of medicine and chemistry.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WATERLOO.

R. W. Gordon district agent for the White sewing machine, died suddenly at Angola last Sunday morning of typhus fever, after a short illness. His funeral took place there on Tuesday. Deceased was well known to many of our business men by whom he was highly regarded.

E. P. Dickison started to his work again Tuesday night. He has been spending a few days studying the work required in the position, and preparing to pass the examination required by the postoffice department.

Miss Callie Vineyard is here attending the institute.

J. C. Jackson, of Howard, Kansas, is here talking business, and shaking hands over the defeat of Governor St. John.

The town has been full of school masters and pretty school marms all the week, and everything has put on a holiday appearance in consequence.

Charley Bassett attended the funeral of Mr. Gordon, at Angola on Tuesday.

John N. Bickel and his wife returned on the Friday afternoon train last week, bringing with them their little child, who died at Deep River, Mich., Nov. 9. The funeral was held in Waterloo on Saturday. Many friends were at the train to meet the bereaved couple, who have the sympathy of all.

The target at the railroad crossing, is moved to the west side of the Jackson track. Sand has been put around the little depot building there, and several other temporary improvements made.

The gravel train is here most of the time now, hauling away the extra dirt from the new grading at the crossing.

Askey's little lunch stand is left out in the cold. He will try to get a new location.

The improvment of the new depot and grounds is still going on.

Mrs. Frank Benns, of Lawrence, Ill., is visiting in the family of her uncle R. M. Lockhart.

It is reported that E. Zerkle and Wilson Shull have bought the grocery store of S. Sheffer, and will take possession next Monday.

Rev. Butler's mother is stopping with him for a few days.

The public schools are closed for a week on account of the institute, and the youths are glad.

Frank Ives, a special agent of the W. U. Tel. Co., has been in the city at different times in the last few weeks, looking up the interests of the company.

A number of the Lake Shore officers were in town Monday, for the purpose of deciding what changes are to be made. They went norch from here in a special car.

John Shull's residence has been provided with a new roof.

The Presbyterian church was filled with an appreciative audience last Sunday, listening to a splendid discourse delivered by Rev. J. D. McCord.

Mrs. Henry Willis returned from Bellfountain, Ohio, last Tuesday, where she had been visiting her children for the past few weeks.

BUTLER.

A rumor that the shops were to be moved created no small flutter among our people the latter part of last week. The rumor seems to be melting into thin air.

Joseph Beck has sold his farm near Franklin Center to John Lowe, and last Saturday bought M. B. Otis' property in Butler. Consideration, $1,200. Mr. Otis moves to Cleveland soon, where he is employed in the office of the superintendent of the "Empire Line."

A. F. Pinchin seems to be improving.

Geo. W. Devor, living about one mile southwest of Butler, received a very severe kick from a horse about a week ago while in Auburn. No serious result seemed to follow, and Mr. D. attended the election, since which violent symptoms appeared and at present writing he is in a precarious condition.

M. B. Otis buried his youngest child, a son, last Friday.

Our school closed last Friday after a very successful term. Both pupils and patrons seemed to be well satisfied with Mr. Sanders as a teacher, and the school is undoubtedly in a very fine condition.

Over fifty new houses have been erected here this year and still more are being commenced.

McMergan's new building is nearly ready for occupancy.

Mr. Moss has gone east to purchase his stock.

We learn that W. A. Wilsey, of Fairfield, formerly of Butler, is seriously ill.

A series of meetings have commenced at the M. E. church.

The Butler Lecture Association emerged into light last week.

HUDSON.

Last Sunday evening Murray Markle of this village was stricken down with neuralgia of the heart. The attack came on without any warning, and for hours death seemed to claim him, but he is now slowly recovering. S.

—Morris Widney had a cousin from Concord township visiting him last week. The cousin is a young man who has been crippled by rheumatism so he cannot walk. But he has a large Newfoundland dog that he can harness to a little carriage, and seated in this the young man can drive around almost as well as if it was a regular team. He seems to enjoy his visit here, and with his novel turnout he attracts a good deal of attraction.

—The many friends of D. M. Allen in this county will be pleased to hear that he has been elected surveyor of Allen county by a fair majority in spite of the combined opposition against him. He was a DeKalb boy and his people still live in Fairfield township. He taught in the country schools here several years and afterwards had charge of the graded school at Spencerville, in which he did good work. From there he went to Maysville, in Allen county, and had charge of that school for several years. Lately he has been engaged there in the furniture business.

—Steuben Republican: Though the Lake Shore company has had possession of the Fort Wayne division only a little over a month, there has been a most gratifying increase in passenger and freight business. Formerly but one coach was attached to the passenger train, and vacant seats were always plenty. Now every train has two coaches, and each of them is more crowded than the one car used to be. This increase in traffic is the more remarkable when it is remembered that no change in the time has been made and no better connections are obtained. The freight business also shows an increase fully as marked as the passenger.

—Bourbon Democrat: The railroad meeting at Leesburg last Tuesday was a grand success. The representation all along the line was full, which was beyond all expectation, and the enthusiasm great. Not a doubt was felt that the road would be a perfect success in the early future. Col. Sear, of this place, was unanimously elected president of the Indiana Pacific road, with a full board of directors and officials from among the many stockholders present. The selection of Col. Sear as president is a selection eminently fitting, and gave perfect satisfaction to every friend of the road. The Colonel is full of energy and enthusiastic beyond expression over the flattering prospects of the new road. His selection as president shows the determination of this organization to push the enterprise as rapidly toward completion as possible. Those who know anything about Mr. Sear and his untiring energy in anything and everything he undertakes, will be more than satisfied that the road will be speedily built if money and energy will accomplish anything. Dr. S. [illegible] as secretary, is an able lieutenant [illegible] president, and all who know [illegible] Doctor know full well that he means [illegible].

"There would appear in truth,' says an English journal, "to be some foundation for the assertion of French economists that, while France is limiting its population to increase its wealth, Germany is expending its wealth in increasing its population. It is obvious that, where so large a proportion of the population is living upon such scanty means, a catastrophe is not impossible."

Ritualism is a serious offense against the laws of the Church of England, where the church is under Governmental shield and patronage. The Rev Mr Green, the Vicar of Miles Platting, who insisted upon practicing ritualism in defiance of the law, has been lying in prison for nearly two years as a martyr to his obstinancy. London dispatches announce his liberation by order of the court.

The Pope of Rome, in an encyclical letter to the churches, recently issued, "hits the nail squarely on the head" when, lamenting the dearth of Christian virtues in the nineteenth century, he declares that "the greater part of of the men to-day are seeking to revel in luxury, and, being extravagant of their own goods, are greedy after those of their neighbors."

The Immigration Society of San Francisco reports that, of 43,000,000 acres in California still belonging to the Federal Government, fully 20,000,000 are suitable for general agricultural purposes. These lands are distributed through nearly every county. This society is distributing descriptive circulars throughout the United States and Europe, and receives the most inquiries from the latter.

The value of a very few votes was significantly illustrated in several Ohio districts. In the Seventh District, Morey, Republican, is elected by forty-one majority. Hart, Republican, in the Eleventh District, is defeated by only three votes, as reported, and McKinley, Republican, in the Eighteenth, is chosen by a majority of only eight.

Commissioner McFarland, of the General Land Office, replying to the questions of a land attorney, says, relative to the location of soldiers' homestead rights on non-contiguous land, that the Land Office does not construe the the law so as to require the tracts entered to be contiguous. In regard to homesteads, he holds that it is a fundamental principle of law that entries be made only for the use, actual occupation and benefit of the homestead party.

The heirs of Phily Francois Renault lay claim to most of the town of Peoria, and a lawyer is now there offering to clear the titles of possessors for a consideration. The heirs claim under an old French grant executed by the French King in 1726. In 1875 this same claim was advanced by McMullen Brothers, of Chicago. In 1875 Hon. Enoch P. Sloan made an exhaustive search into the validity of these claims, and pronounced them valueless.

The Rev. A. D. Mayo reports that as fast as education lays its hand upon the Southern children, black or white, they begin to draw near to each other, and that there is no doubt that at a time not very far distant they will dwell together in unity. The present attitude of the higher classes is favorable to this change. Mr. Mayo said that although many of the children to whom he spoke were descendants of the leaders in the Confederacy, he found the former free from the bias of their fathers. The class of vicious, lazy boys is not so large as people have been lead to believe. A generation of such education as is now going on among the Southern girls will place them abreast of their Northern sisters.

When the supply of coal gets short elsewhere, the world can turn to China for "black diamonds." Baron Richthofen shows that in that country the supply of antharacite coal is not less than 630,000,000 000 of tons, and the bituminous coal supply is just as large. The Baron thinks that, taking what is left in other parts of the world with the Chinese save, we need not fear a fuel famine. He thinks that the supply in the Chinese province of Shansi alone will last the world about 4,200 years.

Speaking of the effect of the adverse decisions of Circuit Judge Hayes, at Davenport, on the Prohibition amendment, the Davenport Daily Gazette says: "Until the decision of Judge Hayes is revised by the Supreme Court of Iowa, the Prohibitory Constitutional Amendment is unconstitutional and invalid in this Judicial District, (Scott, Muscatine, Clinton and Jackson counties), and the business of brewing and selling beer has the sanction of the law."

The third monthly statement of th current fiscal year of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, just issued, shows that for the twelve months ended September 30, 1882, there was an excess of imports over exports of $12,141,869. Women are now eligible to school offices in Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Virginia, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Pennsylvania, Vermont, Wyoming, and to any office in Wisconsin except State Superintendent. Mississippi has a State Board of Education, which includes the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, and eight other persons, one of whom is a woman.

"Refrigerator" beef from Chicago is now sold in some of the interior towns and cities of New York, as well as in the metropolis. The Ithaca Journal says this beef has become a feature in the local market there, and has caused a reduction in the retail price of from 2 to 4 cents per pound on some grades of meat. Choice cuts, however, still command the old figures.

A well-informed writer says: "The records indicate a probable construction of over 11,000 miles of railroad this year. Nobody knows how many miles of railroad we now have in this country. The amount at the end of the present year is likely to be 115,000 or 116,000 miles, and the increase nearly 30,000 miles in three years, or more than one-third. It is not strange that the question is constantly asked whether this work is not going on altogether too fast and locking up too much capital."

As a great livestock market, Chicago maintains its reputation. During October, 175,549 head of cattle, 369,361 hogs, 64,906 sheep, 3,297 calves and 1,656 horses were received at the Union Stock Yards. This was about 10,000 head more cattle than was ever before received in one month, and 24,004 more than were received in October, 1881. In the arrivals of hogs last month there was a falling off of 130,149, as compared with the corresponding period of last year, while in sheep there was a gain of 28,338 head.

One of the falsehoods widely circulated during the recent campaign, should be allowed to die and be forgotten, namely, the charge that Hon. John Overmyer was in 1862, or at any other time, a member of that treasonable organization the "Knights of the Golden Circle," Mr. Overmyer was in 1862 a boy of only 17 years of age, working on his father's farm in Jackson county. Two years later, at the age of nineteen, he made speeches in behalf of the Republican party, and has been a true and active Republican from that day to this. Mr. Overmyer has suffered enough in the house of his friends on account of this dirty, dastardly charge, and no man who respects himself or common decency should ever be caught repeating the vile slander.

The Nihilists received the attention of George Makepeace Towle in a lecture the other evening in Boston. He said that they do not all desire the destruction of the fabric of society and the Government, as their name implies, but many advocate a patrician oligarchy, or a constitutional monarchy, or a republic such as the United States. The party claims a membership of 2,000,000, including representatives of all classes in society and of all professions. They freely declare their purposes, and their method of organization is well known. The society is most skillfully devised, consisting of a network of clubs, extending over the entire Empire, with a central committee in St Petersburg. All its members must know how to read and write. In this, as in every great popular uprising, women have been distinguished for their heroic devotion, and the rolls of the organization including the names of princesses, peasant girls, women of education and nuns and prioresses.

THE STEEL MAIDEN.

A Look at Some of the Instruments of Human Torture in the Middle Ages.

German Letter by D. R. Locke.

In an adjoining tower is a room where there are preserved a number of very curious instruments of torture, used in Nuremberg hundreds of years ago, before the days of jails and penitentiaries. There are thumbscrews of the most improved patterns, and helmets for gossiping men and women. A singularly cheerful piece of furniture is a large, heavy wheel, on one side of which stands out a large, sharp piece of iron. In the glorious days of old, an offender who had to be punished with the wheel was stripped naked and firmly bound to a plank, face downward. The piece of iron on the wheel was heated red hot, and the wheel was rolled up and down and across the victim's back till justice was satisfied or the victim was dead.

Inasmuch as the spike was long enough to go half way through the man's body, and was always heated red hot, the victim generally died, and justice was entirely satisfied. It was not as expeditious as the guillotine, but it was just as certain. The only man who ever survived it was adjudged a magician, because he survived it, and was promptly beheaded for being a magician. That settled him. He didn't bother Nuremberg any more.

There are also displayed switches made of fine threads of steel, which were laid on the bare back with great effect. A little of these things go a good way, but on being told that in the adjoinging tower is the "steel maiden," you get over your qualmishness. Your party is taken in charge by a guide, who shows you a large assortment of horrors before you come to the chief one, as a sort of preparation. There are stocks of all kinds, gags for tattlers, handcuffs, anklets and cradle, the bed of which is filled with spikes, in which old-time offenders were faithfully rocked to sleep—a sleep from which there was no wakening. There are long tables with a screw at the top and bottom, to which men were strapped by the hands and feet, the screws turned till the unfortunate was torn apart. In another part is a large iron cage. In those cheerful days, when a merchant, baker or butcher was found selling his goods by false weight or measure he was placed in this cage and carried all through the city, with his name and trade fastened conspicuously in front. After making a grand tour he was taken, cage and all, to the river and ducked time and again, till it was thought that his lesson was sufficient to prevent repetition. Perhaps some such form might be advantageous in these days.

Wife-beaters in those times were severely punished. They were furnished with close-fitting helmets, from which heavy weights were suspended. They were given a conspicuous place in the public square, appropriately labeled, and places in stocks, with heavy weights attached to their arms and feet, and there they sat the livelong day, subjected to the jeers and ridicule of the town. Scolding wives were put in cages, with gags in their mouths, and exposed in the public square. You are shown all kinds of beheading blocks and gallows upon which noted villains had gone to their reward, while the walls are covered from top to bottom with pictures of the practical operations of the various instruments that filled the room.

All this preparatory to the steel maiden, which is kept in a room above, precisely as she was in the days of her usefulness. You are shown what appears at first sight to be a rude statue of a woman clumsily hewn out of wood. The guide noiselessly opened it, one door swinging to the right and the other to the left. The statue was hollow and just the size of the average man. Inside were straps by which the offender was bound so that he could not move a muscle. All the doors were lined with long, sharp, steel spikes, strong and thick. When the victim was firmly secured, the door on the left was slowly but firmly shut and the long spikes went into his body, two being so arranged as to pierce his eyes. Then the door on the left was closed in a similar manner, and he would receive another complement of spikes, the closing of the doors being done very slowly, that the torture of the man in the embrace of the maiden might be prolonged as long as possible. The very last spike pierced his heart. After remaining shut up for awhile, the straps were unloosened from the outside, a spring was touched and the man fell fifteen feet into a cleverly-constructed machine that ground him up as fine as mincemeat and dropped him into the river below, making food for fishes.

Unseen Helpers.

"Take, oh boatman, thrice thy fee,
Take—I give it willingly,
For invisible to thee
Spirits twain have crossed with me."

"Can you give me a day's work?" asked a poor woman of a well-to-do matron."

"You look very delicate," said the lady. "I need some one to wash, but you do not seem strong enough for the work."

"Oh, yes'm; only try me, and you will see. I have been sick and got behind, and my children need bread; besides, Charlie will help carry the water and lift the tubs," concluded the woman, eagerly.

"Who is Charlie?" asked the lady of the house.

"My husband, ma'am," was the low answer.

The woman was engaged, and did her work well, but there was something that troubled the mistress of the house greatly. As soon as she left the kitchen the woman would call Charlie, and she would hear her voice talking and laughing, and holding converse with some one, but when she went into the room there would be no one there. The water was carried, the tubs all lifted into their places, but the slight woman who washed was the only person who was visible. When the lady of the house paid her she said: "Call your husband; I would like to see him."

"He wouldn't come, ma'am," said the woman, simply. "No one ever sees him but me."

"What do you mean?" asked the lady, in astonishment.

"Why, ma'm, Charles is dead himself, but his spirit comes and helps me; how could I work this way if it didn't? I could no more lift one of those tubs of water alone than you could, ma'm! He's come ever since I was sick and helped me that way."

The compassionate lady placed another coin with those she had already given. "For Charlie and the children," she said, with tears in her eyes, and she saw afterward that the sick and wearied mother was helped by living hands.

But there must be many people bearing burdens greater than they are able to, who are helped and made stronger by invisible guides—the memory of some dead Charlie, who lifts unseen the heart's load, with whom they commute as the work! How would the dull routine of daily life be glorified, could we for one moment see the angel helper at our side! When the pious monk left his duties to go out on a deed of mercy, he returned to find all his homely work done, and for one moment he saw in the door of his cell his Blessed Master smiling upon him! It may be only a vague theory, the delusion of a sick brain—and there is an infinite sadness in it—but surely

"It is a beautiful belief
That ever round our heads
Are hovering on angel wings
The spirits of the dead."

"To feel that unseen hands we clasp
While feet unheard are gathered round:
To know that we in faith may grasp
Celestial guards from heavenly ground."

Old Ike and the Comet.

Louisville Courier-Journal.

Old Ike got up at 4 o'clock yesterday morning and went out into the woodshed to shoot a chicken thief. Looking up into the sky he saw the comet. Soon as his eye caught sight of it he threw down his gun, ran into the house and woke "de ole 'ooman" up by yelling: "Git up ole 'ooman, git up an' say yo' pra'rs quick, kase de debbil's gone to frowin' red-hot balls o' fiah at de earf an' de 'bellion dun commenced. Git up an' go see fo' yo'se'f, den, cum back an' pray, Hanner—pray loud, an' don't fo'git ter menshun me as yer gwine 'long." And the "ole man" stepped outside the door to show the old woman "dat ar charyot ob fiah," when he fell into the cellar, and "de ole 'ooman" fainted and fell in on top of him.

Rheumatism in Horses.

When a horse falls lame at uncertain and irregular intervals, and suddenly recovers and as suddenly falls lame again, it indicates that the cause is rheumatism. Rheumatism is a form of inflammation arising from a disordered and usually acid state of the blood, and attacks the fibrous structure, the muscles and tendons of the body. It is frequently constitutional and hereditary, and shifts from place to place without warning and very suddenly, and it may as rapidly disappear by warmth, the heat of the sun or a change of weather, rainy warm weather being favorable. Indigestion will cause it to appear, or a cold, or even exposure to a slight change of temperature. The most effective remedy is alkaline salts, as acetate of potassa or hyposulphate of soda, given in one-ounce doses, and continued for a wekk or two. Local application of hot fomentations to the limb affected, or of stimulating liniment, will be useful. No corn should be given, and soft mashes of bran or oats and linseed should form the bulk of the food.

Not the Prettiest Woman.

New York Letter in Indianapolis Times.

Agnes Booth, the sister-in-law of Edwin, is a much finer figure and nearer perfection than ever Mrs. Langtry was or can be, dropping her admirable qualities as an actress and her exquisite taste in dress. She is one of the best formed women on the legitimate state. Lilian Russell has no peer for facial beauty on any stage. M'lle Rhea is a much more beautiful woman than Langtry, so is Mary Anderson, and if we turn to brunette beauty, look at Rose Eytinge, though no longer a very young woman. What a wealth of beauty in her liquid dark eyes and fascinating smile! Blanche Roosevelt is another pretty woman. In private life there are hundreds more beautiful women than Mrs. Langtry.

The second Sunday in November is set apart by the Young Men's Christian Association as a day of prayer for young men. A day of prayer for young women ought now to be set apart. It is stated that there are now 175 College Associations in active operation, with a membership of 8,491 students.

Mr. Spurgeon says: "Prayer pulls the rope below and the great bell rings above in the ears of God. Some scarcely stir the bell, for they pray so languidly; others give but an occasional pluck at the rope; but he who wins with Heaven is the man who grasps the rope boldly and pulls continuously with all his might."

The Salvation Army in England receives all sorts of valuables when the contribution box is passed around. Gold and silver watches, gold guards, gold and silver lockets, gold scarf pins, silver brooches, silver solitaires and gold watch keys. Watches and jewelry, it is understood, are to be abandoned by all who claim to be true Salvationists.

The London Echo says that the uncanny talk that has recently been heard as to the part played by Providence in the late Egyptian campaign, recalls an incident in the life of President Lincoln. A delegation of clergymen once waited on him, the spokesman of which said: "We hope the Lord is on our side." Lincoln replied: "I am not so much concerned as to whether the Lord is on our side as that we are on the Lord's side."

A few days ago an unusual ceremony took place at St. Paul's Church, Haggerston, England. A new spire has been erected, thus completing the structure, the stone of which was laid in 1859. The vicar, the Rev. S. J. Stone, mounted the scaffolding to the height of 103 feet, and, attired in his clerical academic garb, "placed in position" the finial cross, after which some brief prayers appropriate to the occasion were said by the vicar. The congregation in the streets below, including 700 school children, then sang "The Church's One Foundation," and the vicar having from his exalted position pronounced the Benediction, decended and received the hearty congratulations of the Church wardens and other friends on the completion of the work.

The Ladies' Theatre in London.

London Standard.

A lyrical theater is about to be opened at which (with the notable exception of the authors and composers of the pieces) all persons taking an artistic part in the performance will be of what was once looked upon as the weaker sex. Authorities differ as to when woman appeared for the first time on the English stage; but it was reserved for the year 1882 to see men, at least at one particular play-house, driven from it. There are many fields of activity in which men can manage to struggle on without the assistance of women. But the drama is not one of them; and if a piece in which a large proportion of the characters are allotted to men is apt to be dull, a theatre at which all the performers were men would be intolerable, and no one would go near it. A theater dependent entirely upon actresses might be less insufferable.

At this thoroughly new temple of art the minor pieces of the lyric drama will chiefly, no doubt, be cultivated; and if operetta and opera bouffe be well played, no one will object to the principal parts in these works being taken by women. The new undertaking may, in fact, be looked upon from two different points of view. It may be regarded as an attempt to place before the world opera bouffe in the most feminine form which that favorite species of entertainment, so largely dependentent for its success on feminine impersonation, has yet assumed. Or, one may look upon it as an endeavor to prove how wonderfully well women can get on by themselves, in business as in art.

It would be easy to show that the tastes of theatre-goers do not fundamently change; though from time to time—and sometimes from one long period to another—it may be thought necessary to appeal to them in different ways. The ballet as such has died out. But it lives again—with a poor kind of life, it is true—in some of the more animated scenes of opera bouffe; and in the post-Offenbachian operettas—so sadly inferior even to the questionable works from which they proceed—the proportion of female to male characters has so much increased that the final step by which male personages, or rather male representatives of such personages, will be made altogether to disappear, is not such an important one as at first sight it may seem.

Of late years a good number of the smaller theaters of Paris—known emphatically and distinctly as petit-theatres—have had pieces written specially for them in which so many female characters are introduced that these works of art are known, in and out of the profession, as pieces a femmes. These dramas possess, as a rule, more scenic and pictorial than literary merit, and are more remarkable for grouping and costumes than for wit. There can be no valid reason, however, why they should not be performed, nor why they should not be patronized by those who care for representatians of an essentially undramatic kind.

A Gambling Room Bravo.

Cor. New York Tribune.

It was in a gambling den in the Texas El Paso. The low adobe rooms were filled with tables around which were clustered Mexicans, wrapped in gally striped serapes, their black eyes glittering feverishly under their broad hats as they laid their bets on Spanish monte or "stud horse poker." The music of the harp, the song of a Mexican woman, and the rattle of money were almost the only sounds. Suddenly a remarkable apparition appeared at a private door and took its seat behind the faro table. It was calculated to serve as an excellent frontspiece for a dime novel. The fellow's long tow-colored hair escaped from beneath his sombrero and fell in ringlets over his shoulders. On his expansive shirt bosom were three nuggets of gold, each about the size of a walnut, and three gold coins. Up and down the lapels of his waistcoat were ranged gold eagles, pieces of turquoise and lumps of virgin gold, while the heavy watch chain was hung full of fifty dollar gold pieces and gaudy set rings. The gambler's small white hands were half hidden under fourteen immense rings which included diamonds, rubies, moss-agates, moon and blood stones. He stroked his waxed moustache and goatee, and glanced keenly about the room to observe the effect of his jewelry, then with an ostentatiously nonchalent manner drew a revolver and laid it on the table beside him. "What is it?" I asked as he began dealing the cards. "He calls himself Colorado Charlie," was the reply, "and he has the heart of a chicken and the gold of a pawnbroker. In '76 he was freighting flour into the Black Hills. Then he became a gambler in Colorado, but the boys made him vamose. He went to San Francisco, but the bootblacks and hoodlums got after him and hooted and pelted him until they made him put up his hair and take off his jewelry. Now he's working this country and trying to impose on "tender feet" He's made some money, because he's shrewd enough to make others work for him, and hires bruisers to do his fighting. If I should pull his nose he'd crawl under the table, and if Bill Thompson or any bad man came in and gave one yell you'd see Colorado Charlie climbing through the transom."

I have given so much attention to this creature simply because he represents a class of long haired, showy frauds who are met with in frontier towns and who not infrequently are taken by "tender feet" to be typical frontiersmen. No mistake could be more absurd. The man who has safely passed through the vicissitudes and trying experiences of frontier life has passed the severest test that can possibly be applied. He may be ignoran of minor points of etiquette, but he is at heart a true gentleman. He is courteous, with something of the dignified suavity of the South, and in manner he is very quiet, but his quiet cloaks a cool bravery and resolution that have been tried again and again. The impression that the old frontiersman is a loud-mouthed, reckless desperado is one that prevails in the East, and one than which nothing can be further from the truth. He has his faults as well as his virtues, but swagger and bluster are not among them.

Strange Railroad Accident.

Milwaukee Republican-Sentinel.

Passengers who arrived in this city yesterday morning gave the particulars of an accident which occurred Tuesday morning at 6:45 o'clock on the Northern Wisconsin division of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway, [illegible] south of Oconto, and which [illegible] extraordinary in railroad history. The north-bound passenger train, with a very large number of passengers, was running along at not less than 25 miles an hour, when her locomotive exploded with gigantic force. "I was seated in the smoking car, the third car from the engine," said John F. Jerrard, a passenger, "[illegible] knew by the loud report and heavy shock to the train what had happened. I was talking at the time with Mr. Whitney, of Pensaukee, and, springing up, I said, the boiler has exploded!" and I expected in the next instant that the train would be smashed into kindling wood. At almost the same instant a mass of rubbish from the explosion fell upon the top of the car, which rattled loudly but did no other damage. Of course in a moment the sensation of danger was passed, as the train ran smoothly along, except a peculiar and unnatural sound from the front of the train, which seemed to move along without any perceptible diminution of speed. I concluded that my impression that the boiler had exploded was erroneous, as everything then seemed to be all right, and a gentleman remarked that a torpedo had probably been exploded under the train with a view to mischief. By this time the train had run down and crossed the bridge across the Oconto river, when the trainman suddenly set the brakes with great exertion and brought the train to a halt. Up to this moment no one on the train knew what the actual situation was except the mail agent and baggage man, and they were unable for some reason to put on the brakes to stop the train. It was finally brought to a standstill. It was then found the four forward trucks of the engine were loaded handsomely upon the tender, which was intact. It was evident that not and individual on the train as it stood there, was injured, and the majority of the passengers did not know that anything had occurred until they were told, as the report was not heard very far back, and many were asleep. But of the engineer and fireman, there was but one voice, 'they are dead.' Some of the passengers and the trainmen ran back, and were utterly amazed to find them standing by the wrecked engine, but little the worse for the dreadful shaking up. After a careful examination of the whole ground the following conclusions were reached by me and many others: First that the explosion had been most terrific; that at the time of its occurrence the engine was lifted from its connection with the tender, and violently wrenched clear of it; that at the same moment the cow-catcher was thrown downward as a matter of course, and as was shown by three ties being rooted up and broken in two nearly in the center, and at the same point by the side of the track lay the nose of the badly demoralized cow-catcher. This must have occurred as the engine was thrown forward into the air with the most terrific force, as was fully established by its being hurled 180 feet forward and along a little to the right of the track before it struck the ground, where it buried itself half out of sight in the mud. Of course this thirty-ton mass of iron must have turned a complete somersault in the air, at which time the forward trucks were dropped upon the tender, where they are lying. The grass and bushes are blackened and dead by the escaping steam underneath the track where the engine flew through the air. The huge machine took itself and all its immense rubbish the result of the explosion, absolutely out of the way, and left a clear track for the train to pass along, and, strange to say, the rails at the point of the broken ties were scarcely disturbed. But the fireman and engineer were carried along with the cab and landed with it, or very near. One pair of trucks on the mail car jumped the track at the point where the exposion occurred, and ran in that situation one mile, passing over the bridge of the Oconto River in that way, and, another odd freak, passing a switch a moment before the train was stopped, they ran on again, and no great damage was done except to tear of the heads of all the spikes from one side of the rail for the whole distance, breaking nearly all the bolts which connect the ends of the rails together; all this without one life being lost or any one seriously injured. Who can cite anything like it in railroads to-day?"

Ostrich Plumes and Tips.

New York Times.

The fortunate lady whose new fall hat dazzles the eye with its rich mass of nodding ostrich plumes probably has little or no idea of the laborious process by which her much prized plumes are developed from the stiff feathered quills plucked from the long-legged bird of the desert. Could those votaries of fashion whose tastes and money have caused the trade in ostrich feathers to increase, in the New York market alone, during the last five or six years, from about $500,000 to nearly $5,000,000 per annum, see the raw feathers as they are brought to the factories they would certainly be surprised and perhaps disgusted. In their natural state the feathers of an ostrich look very much like good-sized quills pulled from the wing of a goose or a hen, and some of them have a grayish or dirty white color which is anything but agreeable. It requires patient and skillful work to give ostrich plumes and ostrich tips the much admired fluffiness and richness of color they display in the milliners' show-cases. This work is growing into an important industry in New York. It already gives employment to more than 5,000 men, women and girls, and the business is spreading with wonderful rapidity. Several importers and manufacturers of ostrich feathers are clustered within the territory lying just west of Broadway, between Houston and Canal streets. One of these, the largest importer of ostrich feathers in the country, informed a Times reporter that he expected his importation of feathers for 1883 alone would amount to about $2,600,000.

"There has been a wonderful increase in the demand for this class of goods during the past few years," he remarked. "The ladies are wearing more feathers on their bonnets and hats than formerly. Two or three years ago a single ostrich feather was thought to be sufficient for one hat, but now fashion demands at least a double plume, and in some cases as many as six or seven feathers for each hat.

This extraordinary demand has not only had the effect of increasing the price of ostrich feathers, but it has induced the ostrich farmers of South Africa to pluck their birds prematurely, thereby putting on the market an inferior quality of feathers. We seldom get large feathers now, and in order to make a good-sized plume, we are obliged two sew to or more feathers together."

"I don't want ten seconds, old man!" she replied as she shook out the dishcloth; "I'm a woman of business, worth $16,000, and wouldn't marry you if you were last man on earth! I give you a minute and half to git!" He got.

is given by using Brown's Iron Bitters. In the Winter it strengthens and warms the system; in the Spring it enriches the blood and conquers disease; in the Summer it gives tone to the nerves and digestive organs; in the Fall it enables the system to stand the shock of sudden changes.

In no way can disease be so surely prevented as by keeping the system in perfect condition. Brown's Iron Bitters ensures perfect health through the changing seasons, it disarms the danger from impure water and miasmatic air, and it prevents Consumption, Kidney and Liver Disease, &c.

H. S. Berlin, Esq., of the well-known firm of H. S. Berlin & Co., Attorneys, Le Droit Building, Washington, D. C., writes, Dec. 5th, 1881:

THE BEST REMEDY

FOR

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL.

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is such a remedy. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency, and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is of acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it. The test of half a century has proven its certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

Boys as Inventors.

It is not generally known that the important slide valve of the steam engine was invented by a boy.

The early form of the steam engine, as constructed by Watt was very rude and incomplete, and it was necessary to open and close the steam valves with a hand lever at every motion of the piston. This lever was usually operated by a trusty boy, the work not being very hard, but demanding constant attention, as each jet of steam had to be supplied at the proper time.

A boy (his name has not been recorded) was hired to operate the valve levers of a large engine at one of the mines in England. While engaged in this duty, which demanded his constant attention, he noticed that a certrin part of the engine moved in the same direction as his hand and at the exact time he had to open the valve. He procured a strong cord and made one end fast to that part of the machinery, and the other end to the valve lever. Then the boy had the satisfaction of seeing the engine to move with perfet regularity, aking its own supply of steam just when it was needed.

A short time after, the foremen camet along and saw the valve tender playing marbles at the door. A glance at the engine revealed the value of the boy's invention; and Watt at once adopted the idea, and made his steam engine a perfect automatic working machine.

There was quite a lively fight at Ashland, Kentucky, last week, between the state militia and a mob. The troops were taking two men charged with murder, from Catlettsburg to Maysville for safe-keeking. The boat on which they were going was attacked at Ashland by the mob which had taken possession of another boat and were determined to take the prisoners and lynch them. The two boat loads fought for some time but the troops being better armed and equipped, came off victorious, and landed the prisoners safe at Maysville, with but little loss. Several of the people on the shore were killed and many wounded as they stood in the line of fire, when the troops fired at the mob. The affair is a very lamentable one, but such scenes may be expected as long as mobs are as popular as they are in some parts of the country.

The southwest one-fourth of the southwest quarter of section twenty-five (25) in township thirty-five (35) north of range twelve (12) east in DeKalb county, Indiana, excepting a piece out of the southwest corner, twenty-five (25) rods long, east and west by six and a half (6½) rods wide north and south.

Terms:—One-third cash in hand and the residue in equal payments at twelve and eighteen months, with notes at interest; waiving valuation laws and secured by mortgage on said premises. Sale at 2 o'clock p. m.
EMANUEL NEIDIG.
Administrator.

Administrators Sale.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned administrator de bonis non of the estate of James Quince deceased, will offer for public sale at the late store building of said decedent, in St. Johns, Butler township, DeKalb county, Indiana, the personal property of said estate consisting of a stock of dry goods, notions, boots and shoes and such other property as is usually kept in a general store. Sale to commence at nine o'clock a. m. Saturday November 18, 1882, and continuing until stock is disposed of. Terms: Sums of $5.00 and under, cash; over $5.00 a credit of nine months will be given the purchaser executing his note, waiving appraisement laws, with sufficient sureties. No interest until note becomes due.
JAMES D. ROWLEY, Adm'r.

COMMISSIONER' SALE.

STATE OF INDIANA } SS
DEKALB COUNTY }
In DeKalb Circuit Court, September term 1882.
Rachel Beatty,
vs. } Partition.
Abraham Beatty, et al

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned commissioner, appointed by the DeKalb Circuit Court, at its September session, A. D. 1882, in the above entitled cause, to sell the real estate hereinafter described, at private sale, will sell at private sale, the following premises situate in DeKalb county, in the state of Indiana, to-wit:

The north half of the southeast quarter and the south half of the south half of the northeast quarter, all in section thirty three (33) township number thirty-three (33) north of range thirteen (13) east, containing one hundred and twenty acres of land, more or less.

Proposals for the purchase of said premises will be received by me at my office in the town of Auburn in DeKalb county, state of Indiana, from December 8th, A. D., 1882, until December 16th, A. D., 1882, at 12 o'clock M., of said day, at which time said premises will be sold to the person having made the highest and best offer therefor, provided said offer be equal in amount to the appraised value of said premises.

TERMS OF SALE:—One-third cash; one-third in nine months and one-third in eighteen months from the day of sale. The deferred payments to draw interest at six per cent from the day of sale, and secured to the satisfaction of said commissioner.
Nov. 6, 1882. JAMES E. ROSE
Commissioner.

TESTIMONIALS.

Gentlemen:—Your buggies have given me entire satisfaction, both in style and durability I have used them for the past three years Your recent improvements on road wagons I consider the best in the market.
MES H. RAMBURG.
Frederick Maryland.

Dear Sirs: We have used buggies of your make that have been in use three years, and no buggy we have that cost twice the amount has given better satisfaction.
JAMES H. ALEXANDER,
Johnstown Pa.

Gentlemen: We have used the Columbus Buggy Company's work for the last five years and can conscientiously recommend it as strictly first class as to style, material, workmanship and durability. Your buggies have given better satisfaction than any other make of vehicles we had in use for the last ten years
PALMER & WHITTAKER.
Red Oak Iowa.

Gentlemen: It gives me pleasure to state that I have been selling your buggies and carriages for four years, and can safely recommend them to any one in want of a buggy or carriage. Yours Truly, J. L. GRIBBLE.,
Macomb, Illinois.

Gentlemen: With over fifteen years experience in building buggies, wagons, &c., I do not hesitate in saying your buggies and carriages are strictly first-class in workmanship, material and proportions, filling a long-felt want for a reliable article that can be sold at a price lower than any ordinary manufacturer can produce and sell the same quality of Work at. Yours, etc. I. S. KRICK, Conneautville Pa.

Gentlemen: I have used your Brewster side bar buggies for four years, together with buggies that cost me $300 and $350, and your buggies were the first that went out, on account of being side-bar. They have not cost me $5 for repairs, and those I have sold of your make have given good satisfaction. I think that you make the cheapest and best road wagons that are made in the United States for the money Respectfully, P. H. HAMLIN, Lawrence Kansas.

Dear Sirs: We have been using your buggies for the last four or five years. They have given entire satisfaction. I think they are the best buggies made for the money.
W. S. GRIMES & CO., Liverymen Whitehall Illinois.

Gentlemen: We have been handling your work for two seasons, and have in every instance found your buggies first class. We never have had one of your jobs returned to us for repairs; neither have we had a single complaint on account of work not being perfectly satisfactory. Very Respectfully, H.P. BUCKLEY & CO., Springfield, Illinois.

Gentlemen. I have no hesitancy in saying that the buggies manufactured by the Columbus Buggy Company are the best work for the price I have any knowledge of. In not a single instance has there been any dissatisfaction on the part of any one of my customers.
FRANK L. HALL.
Owensboro, Ky.

Dear Sirs: For the past two years we have used your buggies side by side with other makes in both our stables, and are perfectly satisfied with the strength, durability and workmanship compared with others. As fast as our stock in livery is used up we shall replace them with your manufacture, knowing from experience that it is the best we can do. Respectfully,
SWEET & FOLLANSBEE,

Toads.

Don't kill the toads—the ugly toads that hop around your door; each meal a little toad doth eat a hundred bugs or more. He sits around with aspect meek until the bug is neared, then shoots he forth his little tongue, like lightning double-geared. And then he soberly doth wink, and shuts his ugly mug, and patiently doth wait until there comes another bug.—[Henderson (Ky.) News.

A Patent for Married Men.

Our patent bed-spring has been remodeled. The one for two in a bed is so arranged that the part the wife lies on can be set by the husband unknown to the former, and it springs her out of bed and stands her up on the floor at any hour for which it is set. It then remains turned up on the edge, so she can't get back again—at least on her side of the bed; and she won't come back on his side, for she is too all-fired mad to come near him. So the result is she is compelled to dress and go down stairs to see to breakfast, and the old man will get a rest. Oh, it's a daisy!

A Human Beanstalk.

Jean Condoist has been brought to Paris as a medical curiosity from the Haute Caone. According to a medical contributor to a Parisian contemporary, this youth, aged 19, took a start on the 17th of May, 1881, being then six feet three inches high, and found one morning that he had grown an inch. Every week since then he has registered himself, and on the 14th of September this human beanstalk had gained nearly five inches; he grew five inches more before the 20th of January, 1882, and seven more before March 15, and he now stands 7 feet 10 inches. All this has been accompanied by great pains in the back, and he stoops considerably; but since last June it is his legs that have grown, and his feet are already 24 inches long.

The Enormous Size of London.

[Land.]

London has a larger population than many a European state with a sovereign and a parliment. At the census of 1881 the area of metropolitan taxation and police contained 4,764,312 persons. Thus there are in London more than double the number of people in Denmark, including Greenland; nearly three times as many as in Greece; more than eighteen times the population of Montenego; some thousands more than Portugal, including the Azores of Medeira; nearly treble the population of Servia; more than double that of Bulgaria; three-quarters of a million more than in Holland; more than Sweden or Norway or Switzerland. And yet this splendid capitol, the most populous and wealthy city the world has ever seen, is practically without a government.

Spoiled by One Letter.

Some critic, to point a remark on the frequent consequence of a single letter in a poetic line, supposed the whimsical alteration of Byron's "I stood in Venice, on the Bridge of Sighs," to "J. stood in Venice," etc., as though J. stood for Jones.

The Courier-Journal tells of a poet who, wishing to write that his little wife was out beyond the brook, found that "brook" would not make the rhyme. Therefore he thought he would substitute for it the word "burn," which means brook. So he wrote, "My little wife is out beyond the burn." It made a pretty line, and it did well enough until the newspapers began to copy the poem. An intelligent compositor soon fell afoul of it. He thought, "Well, here's an error, sure; that word 'burn' ought to be 'barn,' of course;" so he changed it to barn. Now the poem begins, "My little wife is out behind the barn." Imagine the poet as his eye falls upon this cold-blooded murder.

Eighty-Five Dollars Lost.

"You do not tell me that your husband is up and entirely cured by so simple a medicine as Parker's Ginger Tonic?" "Yes, indeed, I do," said Mrs Benjamin to her neighbor, and after we had lost eighty-five dollars in doctor bills and prescriptions. Now my husband feels as well as ever. 44-4w

Shelbyville claims the distinction of having the oldest living native-born Hoosier in the person of Isaac H. Wilson, who is seventy-five years and two months old, and was born and always lived in Indiana.

Forgot the Oysters.

"Why are you sad, Beryl?"

The girl turned her head slightly as these words were spoken, and as her lissome figure with its rounded curves and beautiful flesh tints stood sharply outlined, clear and perfect as a cameo, in the moonbeams that were falling in a silver spray through the branches of the linden trees, the sight was indeed a pretty one. George W. Simpson looked at her earnestly a moment, and saw that tears were welling up in the dusty brown eyes, and sobs that could not be restrained convulsing the girlish form.

"Why should I not be sad?" she said. "The sweet summer is dying. There are hollows in her fair cheeks; a pathetic droop about the ripe red lips, dark shadows beneath the lovely eyes. And already across the hazy hills autumn peers, berry-stains on her brown, slim, fingers, purple vines trailing about her, scarlet buds and golden-rod for the coronal, and a broken reed for her sceptre. Already the hollows are brimmed with amber haze and the hilltops crowned with blue smoke. The sun looks languidly through dream clouds; a yellow leaf falls here and there, and some prudent birds fly southward ere yet the first frost makes the fruit ruddy and ripens the hazelnuts in the hedges, ere yet the sumac catches some blood-drops from the heartwound of fainting summer, and the aster looks with blue and wistful eyes from the woodland path."

"It is indeed a time fraught with suggestions that are mournful," said George, "but surely there is one gleam of hope, one little ray of golden sunshine amid all the mists and clouds"—and, bending over the girl in a loving fashion, he whispered a word in her ear.

A smile chased away the despondent look, and the tears that dimmed starry eyes were quickly dashed away. Putting her arms around George's neck, Beryl murmured softly and with a look of perfect trust: "You are right, sweetheart; I had forgotten the oysters."—Chicago Tribune.

Wanted the Weather Fine.

"Are you the gentleman that foretells the weather?" asked a country-looking young woman yesterday, as she blushingly entered the sanctum of the signal office in New York.

"I am," responded a young man, examining a barometer. "What can I do for you?"

"I would like to know," she hesitatingly said, "what kind of weather we will have on the 15th of next May. You see, John and I are going to get married then, and if you could arrange it so it will be a pleasant day, we will feel ever so much obliged to you. Now, couldn't you?"

"Well," said the polite observer, "I think I might be able to accommodate you. I will do all I can, Miss."

"Do you think you could make it clear and sunshiny on the 15th?"

"Well, Miss, I will telegraph to the west and northwest and endeavor to get them to withhold all tornados, gales and rainstorms until after the 15th. It will be somewhat of a favor to ask the people up there to keep their tornados chained, but I think if I present the condition of affairs to them they will fix it all right."

"I am ever so much obliged to you, and I'm sure John will thank you. I will be sure to send you an invitation."

An Ohio paper says it may not be uninteresting to our readers to know that blue grass, so famous in Kentucky, was first raised in Indiana, at a little village called Miami Village, on White River, in Hamilton county. In the year 1781, John and William Conner were stolen by the Indians from Pittsburgh, Pa., and taken to this village. John here became the chief man among the Indians, and through him we learn that blue grass was a native of what is now Hamilton. In 1810 as Gen. Harrison's army was returning south, they took quantities of it to Vincennes and Kentucky, and then from there it spread. Judge Finch, of Indianapolis, has often been heard to coroborate this statement, and it may be accepted as correct that blue grass was first raised in what was then known as the northwestern territory, now Indiana.

How 'Twas Done.

AN ADMIRABLE LITTLE WORK WHICH DEMONSTRATES VERY MUCH MOST INTERESTING INFORMATION JUST NOW GREATLY SOUGHT AFTER.

Maj. Pangborn, the well known compiler of the B. & O. Red Book, which has become the standard political text book of the country, is now engaged with a large force of assistants in preparing a special edition of the Red Book, which promises to be quite a unique thing in political literature. It is to be issued under the taking title of "How 'Twas Done: The Political Revolution of 1882."

Within the most artistically engraved covers by the American Bank Note Company will be embraced the official results of the election just held, and arranged so perfectly and intelligently that the veriest amateur in such statistics cannot fail to comprehend them. The figures will be given on state ticket and on congressional ticket in separate tables, the former by counties and the latter by counties and districts. In both tables comparisons will be made with the vote at the last preceding election in each state, the returns of which will be given in full in order that the understanding of the situation may be complete. In states where the congressional districts have been changed since 1880, the districts will be shown as now constituted, thus demonstrating what the result would have been two years ago had the same counties composed the districts as now. Independent, prohibition and greenback figures will be given in addition to the regular republican and democrat, and in each county the vote of each party will be shown with majorities, gains and losses both years, together with total vote of county, congressional district and state. Statistical tables will also be included in the book, showing upon similar full and comprehensive scale the vote for president in 1876 and 1880.

In no publication of like character are such clear and exhaustive tabular statements attempted as in the B. & O. Red Book, and the forthcoming special edition will eclipse any previous edition in extent and interesting character of information furnished. Included within the remarks accompanying the returns will be the details of the changes in congressional districts, the congressmen-elect, and the unsuccessful candidates in each state, as well as the members of the next congress complete, and the changes in that body as compared to the last congress. Much other data will be given, and in the way of a thorough understanding of exactly "How 'Twas Done" it would be difficult to imagine a more interesting and reliable a source of explanation than will be this new edition of the B. & O. Red Book. Like its predecessor, it will be sent without any cost whatever to all who make application for it to C. K. Lord, general passenger agent B. & O. R. R., Baltimore, Md.

The Red Book is, as a matter of course, an advertisement of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, but it combines so much of general interest to the public with comparitively so little about the road, that it is far more valuable than nine-tenths the publications of the character placed on sale.

The B. & O. Red Book is by heavy odds the handsomest political work from a typographical standpoint issued in the United States, being always printed with exquisite taste on fine paper and bound in the best manner. It certainly is worth the little trouble occasioned in writing for it, and it is hazarding nothing to predict that the new special edition devoted to the election which has just taken place will be pre-eminently the text-book of 1882.

As there will doubtless be an immense demand for the book, it would be well for all desiring a copy to write at once to Mr. Lord, as the edition will be sent out to those making application on the principal of first come first served. Envelopes will be addressed as applications come in, so that there may be no delay in mailing when the work is received from the binder.

Schools in Asia

In India, school is held out of doors. The boys sit on the ground, and the master quietly smokes his pipe on the door-mat. There are four classes: the first called the chalk class, because the children write on the ground with chalk; the second, the palm-leaf class, because they use palm-leaves for slates; the third, for the same reason, the plantain-leaf class, and the fourth, for the oldest scholars, is known as the paper class, because the seniors are allowed the use of paper. It takes Indian children a long time to learn to write perfectly.

On the Queen's Business.

A telegraph-office had recently been opened at a village post-office. The schoolmaster had been applied to by the postmaster to recommend a trustworthy boy to carry out the telegraphic messages. He soon selected young Robert as a boy who could be thoroughly trusted, not only for his integrity, but also for his civility, activity and careful attention to orders.

"That boy have I trusted with important messages, and have never known him to loiter by the road when told to be quick. He is the son of a widow, too; and he has deservedly gained the worthy character of being a good lad to his mother."

This recommendation from the schoolmaster was enough, and the youth was soon attired in the Queen's uniform, and entrusted with the responsible post of delivering the various telegrams received in the course of each day at the office.

Whenever he crossed the village common on Saturday afternoons, he was usually solicited by his old schoolfellows to join in a game of cricket; but without slackening his quick step he would pleasantly call out, "I am on duty—on the Queen's business."

A clothing house of Chicago recently made a contract with an advertising agency of the same city, to secure advertising in country papers, to be paid one-fourth in clothing. The clothiers have now commenced a suit to cancel the contract, and have sent around marked papers so as to get some more free advertising in the victimized papers. The agency do right in holding to the contract. The joke is, that the contract with the editor is so drawn that while he thinks he will get pay for advertising in clothing at 25 per cent off, he must really take $200 worth of clothing, and pay $150 in order to get pay for $50 worth of advertising. What an editor would do with $200 worth of clothing is what we would like that advertising agency to rise and explain.—Lagrange Standard.

"Darling," she whispered softly, as they sat, locked in a fond embrace, gazing at the stars, "I have been told that each star in the heavens is a bright, pure and noble soul. It is so, dearest?" "Yes, I have heard so," he replied, pressing a kiss on her lips. "And do you darling," she continued, "do you—do you think I will become a star when I die?" "Oh, pshaw! You're too fat to be a star!" He protests that he said it without thinking, but she refuses to accept his apology, and the engagement is off. She is riding horseback to get down to star-weight!—Fitchgerald, Philadelphia Sun.

The Shadow on the Snow.

There isn't much snow yet, but there is a heap of shadow—and the shadow is the shadow of Christmas, which, like other coming events, projects its umbra in front of it. In every family two important problems are hastening to solution; and while the elder members are asking themselves, "What shall we give?" the younger are no less eagerly speculating as to what they shall get. The boys drop vague hints of the desirability of skates and sleds, and books of adventure and exciting narrative, while the little girls are bemoaning the dilapidated condition of the present generation of dolls, and artfully trying to inveigle mamma into that phrase so full of promise: "We'll see at Christmas-time."

It really is no easy task to select a line of Christmas presents, so as to insure that every little one shall get just what it will most appreciate, and none shall be unduly favored; and as the holiday season draws near, the careful mother feels, more than at any other time, the need of some reliable manual, by referring to which she may know just what is to be had, and just what everything will cost. And luckily, in this age of journalistic enterprise, the very thing she wants lies ready to her hand. For the winter number of the fashion quarterly is out, and a copy can be had for only fifteen cents. Within the campass of its ninety odd pages are illustrations of every kind and description of Christmas gifts; from the rattle of toy reins for the three-year-old infant, up to the gold-headed cane or dressing-gown for papa, or the long-wished-for watch for mamma. Dolls and dool's furniture, tin toys, mechanical toys, telegraphic machines, bonbon boxes, velocipedes, fancy stationary, gorgeous plush-covered boxes, savings banks, magical apparatus, books of every kind—in short, the whole range of possibilities in the way of Christmas presents is covered; and parents' purses and children's fancies can alike be suited, however fastidious the one, or attenuated the other. Indeed, we believe it safe to say that such a mass of useful information, for so small price, was never issued from the press before.

The fashion quarterly is published by Messrs. Ehrich Bros., of New York, at 50 cents a year, or 15 cents a copy.

Father J B O'Donoghue, pastor of the Catholic Church at Morrow, Ohio, died from the effects of a blow from a monkey-wrench in the hands of Timothy Green. Green says he struck the blow because the priest accused his wife in church on Sunday of being a thief.

An Indian Territory special says the principal Chief of the Creek nation has pardoned eight of the eleven men convicted of the murder of Captain Scott, during the recent rebellion in the Nation. The remaining three will be executed by shooting, but the date is not yet fixed.

The newly elected State officers will enter upon their official duties as follows: Secretary of State, January 16; Attorney General and Clerk of the Supreme Court, immediately after the official count of the vote; Auditor of State, January 25; Treasurer of State, February 9; Superintendent of Public Instruction, March 15; Supreme Court Judges, January 1.

The German government has begun to take decisive action against the proprietors and managers of lottery schemes and transactions. Two thousand persons have been indicted on the charge of dealing in forbidden foreign lotteries, and further indictments are promised. It is anticipated that there will be revelations that will produce a sensation in the country.

In his Thanksgiving proclamation Governor Sherman, of Iowa, says: "The year has been rich in prosperity and blessing. Small portions of the State have been scourged by tempest, but the distressed have found among our people, and in our sister States, a generosity which was eager for their relief, and measured its gifts only by the needs of those in want. Let us be thankful for the goodness of human hearts."

The highest indications as to the yield of corn are for an aggregate of 1,608,000,000 bushels. Of this amount, Indiana returns 99,000,000 bushels. The greatest yield in any one State is that of Illinois—200,000,000 bushels; the smallest, those of Delaware and Florida—4,000,000 bushels each, All New England yields but 7,000,000 bushels; but the returns by states is not given.

The civil service reform that will provide a fixed tenure in office for appointees in the Goverment service, and root out the practice of using such appointments as rewards for personal political service, will reach and cure most of the evils of the spoils system. A tenure of four years for subordinate officials and of six years for the President, would provide amply for rotation in office without disturbing the efficiency of the civil service, and at the same time immensely modify the pressure for official changes that besets every in-coming administration under the present system. A single, six-years Presidential term is a very important factor in any practical and sensible plan of civil service reform.

Since March the missionaries of the American Sunday School Union in the Northwest have established 408 new Sunday schools in new settlements or destitute places. These schools have a membership of 2,028 teachers and 16,120 scholars. The Union also aided 1,033 old schools, which contain 5,149 teachers and 44,106 scholars.

Some excitement is now prevailing regarding some of the newly-discovered mineral springs, considered highly remedial, in the woods about twelve miles southeast of Marion, Ill. They are in Williamson county. People are going from all directions to see and be cured.

The value of a very few votes was significantly illustrated in several Ohio districts. In the Seventh District, Morey, Republican, is elected by forty-one majority. Hart, Republican, in the Eleventh District, is defeated by only three votes, as reported, and McKinley, Republican, in the Eighteenth, is chosen by a majority of only eight.

The heirs of Philip Francois Renault lay claim to most of the town of Peoria, and a lawyer is now there offering to clear the titles of possessors for a consideration. The heirs claim under an old French grant executed by the French King in 1723. In 1875 this same claim was advanced by McMullen Brothers, of Chicago. In 1875 Hon. Enoch P. Sloan made an exhaustive search into the validity of these claims, and pronounced them valueless.

Postmaster General Howe will not recommend the establishment of postal savings banks. A postal savings bank system presupposes a permanent national debt, that savings deposited may find an investment for which the government is responsible. In fifteen years, at the present rate of paying off the debt, there will be no government bonds in the market, and, hence, no basis on which to build a postal saving's bank system.

A cold-blooded murder took place at a saloon near Milwaukee. John Perkins, on his way to pay his church dues, stepped into a saloon to get out of a shower. The inmates began to jeer him, and finally a desperate character, named John Loew, caught him up, carried him to a stairway, and threw him down a distance of twenty-five feet. His neck was broken, and he died in a few minutes. Loew was arrested.

A report from Inspector Holcombe says the rush of applicants was so great on the day the land office at Huron, Dakota, was opened—October 9—that the building was nearly dismantled, several fights for precedence took place, and the receiver was compelled to make the announcement that all applications would be regarded as having been filed simultaneously. Over $90,000 worth of land was sold for cash the first day, and 100,000 acres entered.

S. C. Armstrong, Superintendent of the Indian school at Hampton, Va., reports that $59,714 has been contributed by individuals for the support of the school, and aid to the amount of $35,265 was furnished by the government. The pupils last year turned out seventy-five set of harness and 2,000 pairs of brogans. That school and the one at Carlisle, Pa., are doing a beneficient work towards the civilization of the "rising generation" of the Indian tribes.

The speculation in the improvement of the Calumet river, "from the Calumet harbor to the town of Pullman," is probably nipped in the bud by the frost of the recent election, so far as Government aid is concerned. The speculators, however, can have the benefit of the Government survey, and can go on with the work at their own expense, earning their reward from the lumber yards, coal yards, docks, elevators, etc., that will buy and occupy sites along the line of the improvement.

Eva Wehrle, a Cincinnati widow lady, having had trouble in settling her husband's estate, determined to "shuffle of this mortal coil without waiting for the lagging footsteps of decay. A dog, of the Spitz variety, was her sole companion in the house. Either for the purpose of seeing, by personal observation, what manner of exit death by hanging, was, or else because she feared he would be misused if she left him in this cold world alone, she swung him up by a stout cord and then hung herself.

The annual report of General O O Howard on discipline at West Point has been made public, in which he says the custom has grown up of settling petty difficulties by what is called a fisticuff. After detailing the incidents, and the punishment inflicted upon the offenders, General Howard says: "I am confident a lasting impression against this barbarous code has been made in the corps. Certainly, very few of the cadets at present in the academy have had anything to do with it."

When the supply of coal gets short elsewhere, the world can turn to China for "black diamonds." Baron Richthofen shows that in that country the supply of antharacite coal is not less than 630,000,000,000 of tons, and the bituminous coal supply is just as large. The Baron thinks that, taking what is left in other parts of the world with the Chinese area, we need not fear a fuel famine. He thinks that the supply in the Chinese province of Shansi alone will last the world about 4,200 years.

The financial question is troubling Japan. A few years ago a system of paper money was adopted, currency was issued, and for a time everything went well. But it was found impossible to maintain the credit of the large amount of money which came into circulation, and the paper has depreciated in value 60 per cent. The banks are generally regarded with distrust, and several of the more important have already failed. There is one avenue to the prosperity which lies open to the Japanese, and only one; and that is the same course which was adopted by our country when its financial interests were involved and troublesome. The experiment with paper money has universally failed, and a return to a specie basis is the only cure.

In one respect, at least, President Arthur has been handsomely indorsed in the recent election. A prominent supporter of his administration says: "If there is one thing more gratifying than another in reading the election returns it is to notice the long list of names of those who voted for the passage of the river and harbor bill, over the President's veto, who will stay at home. A few have been re-elected, but they have been almost without exception the best men in the party who are not in the habit of making mistakes of that character. The Robeson-Hubbell crowd, who are always ready for a raid on the Treasury at the least provocation, are hunting for district schools to teach at $16 a month."

The woman suffrage amendment, which the Legislature of Oregon passed, will be submitted to the vote of the people at the next general election, which will not occur until June, 1884.

At Milford, James M. Wiley shot a man by the name of Wm. Bradburn. Milford is eight miles west of Greensburg, and the news came by telephone. Wiley killed a man at Milford several years ago, and was sent to the penitentiary for life on a judgement of guilty. After being in prison a few years he was pardoned. Bradburn is not dead, and may not be seriously hurt.

Marcus Markwald, of Brooklyn, N. Y., the costumer of Alice Oates' Comic Opera Company, and one of the best in the country, has been declared insane at Richmond. While the company was there, he tried to chastise a hotel clerk, without provocation, and built a bonfire in the middle of his room, at midnight, over which he harrangued an imaginary audience of show people.

Maggie Hammond of Connersville, the young lady whose new-born child was taken from a vault recently, was, on Saturday, brought before Judge Bonner to plead to an indictment charging her with murder in the second degree. She stood during the reading, but at the conclusion, when asked whether guilty or not guilty, she broke down in tears, and exclaimed: "I did it. I am sorry for it." She was removed to prison.

Joseph Sims, of Russellville, arrested for forging and passing a pension voucher for $12, waived preliminary examination before Commissioner Baker, at Indianapolis, and was released from custody on his own recognizance. The case is a singular one. Joseph M. Sims, of Reese's Mill, receives a pension of $12 quarterly, but in mailing the vouchers they were sent to Russellville at three different times, and were delivered to the defendant, who had filed an application for a pension, and claims that he was under the impression that the checks were intended for him.

In July last, a man giving his name as A. A. Addison, appeared at the Dearbon County Teachers' Institute, at Moore's Hill, and though a stranger he became prominent in its proceedings. There was also in attendance a Miss Welch, to whom Addison showed much attention. They secured schools some fifteen miles apart, and he often visited her. A few days ago Addison's wife appeared on the scene, and after a tearful scene took him home with her to Wakemen, Ohio. It appeared that his real name was Cobben, and that he had deserted his wife, having become infatuated with Miss Welch, who was one of the pupils in the school at Wakeman, where he was the respected and honored principal.

Mighty Useful For Walking.

Texas Siftings.

A pastorial visit: Rev. Whangdoodle Baxter, of the Blue Light Tabernacle, called at the house of Jim Webster, one of his flock, to make a pastoral visit. Mrs. Webster was at home, but not desiring to furnish Whangdoodle with the usual meal of which he was in pursuit, hid behind a curtain and told her little boy to tell the clergyman that she was not at home. In hiding behind the curtain, however, she unknowingly left her feet exposed to view. "Is your mudder in?" No sah she am done gone out walkin'. "When she comes home tell her I says de next time she goes out walkin' she should take her feet along wid her, as dey am mighty useful in walkin' any distance."

All Children Are Born Deaf.

London Nature.

With regard to the sense of hearing, it is first remarked that all children for some time after birth are completely deaf, and it was not until the middle of the fourth day that Professor Preyer obtained any evidence of hearing in his child. This child first turned his head in the direction of a sound in the eleventh week, and this movement in the sixteenth week had become as rapid and as certain as a reflex In the twenty-first month it danced to music, and in the twenty-fourth imitated song; but it is stated, on the authority of other observers, that some children have been able to sing and even pitch correctly, a melody, as early as nine months. One such child used at this age to sing in its sleep, and at nineteen months could beat time correctly with its hand while singing an air.

The Political Situation.

New Orleans Times.

A man was carrying a coon he had caught, when he met three little boys in the road. All of them said excitedly and at once: "Mister, give me that coon, give me that coon, give me that coon, Mister."

"Well, boys, I'll tell you what I will do. If you will tell me the party you belong to and why, I'll give it to the boy who gives the best reason for his faith." "I'm a Republican, because that party saved the Union," said one. "I'm a Greenbacker, because that party is in favor of plenty of money." When the time of the third boy came he said: "I'm a Democrat, 'case I want the coon."

NEW YORK.

The Post says: "We can find no authority for the report current yesterday that Vanderbilt had sold $10,000,000 of his 4 per cent bonds, but we do hear from various qurters in the loan market of money borrowed on these donds. The money may be either used in connection with the recent purchase of the 'Nickel Plate' (which company it will be observed is to use Lake Shore, Michigan Central and Canada Southern stocks, or for both purposes. However this may be, when a capitalist of Vanderbilt's magnitude is a borrower of money, it indicates he has confidence in the situation so far as it relates to railroad property for the next six months.

Later,—Since writing earlier in the day, information of a character not to be questioned, comes to us to the effect that Vanderbilt has privately sold $10,000,000 of his 4 per cent bonds and at a price about 2 per cent below that current in the market, and that the buyers were several savings banks and institutions which want this class of securities.

The Bierstadt place at Irvington, on the Hudson, owned by Albert Bierstadt, the artist, was destroyed by fire this morning. The building was erected sixteen years ago at a cost of $100,000. A studio 75 by 79 feet, with ceiling 35 feet high, was situated in the rear of the second story. All the rooms were spacious; the interior was finished in hard woods; large Turkish rugs took the place of carpets; the furniture was costly. Nearly every room contained from three to ten valuable pictures of famous artists. In the library are two pictures of Yosemite Valley, valued at $10,000 each. The house was filled with many valuable trophies and curiosities, which Bierstadt has collected in the Yosemite Valley and elsewhere. So far as known these valuable relics and furniture were totally destroyed. The furniture itself was probably worth $10,000. The pictures and curiosities are estimated to have been worth nearly $100,000 more.

There was almost another disaster in the Harlem tunnel Saturday. As the New Haven train that leaves Mt Vernon at 8:17 a m, was passing through the main tunnel, it was stopped about Eighty-second street. The rear brakeman ran back and stopped a train a few blocks in the rear, when some person said "All Right," and the train started again. The conductor of the first train sent another brakeman back, and he stopped the train in the rear, within 100 feet of the one ahead of it. The passengers were much excited.

The suit of Samuel Wilkinson against Henry Ward Beecher was call- Tuesday, before Judge Barret, in the surpreme court. The action is for a breech of contract. Beecher contracted with the publishing firm of Ford & Co., in December, 1869, to write a life of Christ. He agreed to write the book within eighteen months, and received, as part payment in advance and before signing the contract, $10,000. Wilkinson was a partner in the firm, and paid the advance. Since then, the plaintiff says, has never been able to get the book from Mr Beecher nor the $10,000 advanced. When the case was called both sides were ready. Beecher was present and sat by his counsel, Thomas G Shearman.

Louis Olsen, the Swede who killed his wife Sunday, died Tuesday morning in the hospital from the effects of excessive drinking.

WASHINGTON.

So far as the House is concerned it is simply a question of majority. The highest claim of the Democrats tonight is 197. The Republicans can not count crtainly more than 128. The readjuster coalition is not sure of more than five, while one straightout Greenbacker is elected. On the basis of this statement 117 of the Democratic-members-elect are from Northern States or States which did not officially enter the rebellion, including Missouri and Kentucky as such, and seventy-nine are from ex-Confederates States. The Democrats have a majority in the congressional delegations from twenty-two States, and the Republicans from thirteen, if, as is now claimed, Illinois, Florida and Virginia shall prove to be equally divided. hhis would prevent the possibility of any very close contest should the next presidency be thrown into the house.

As to the Senate the dispatches have tc-day cast doubts upon one or two States, and the Democrats claim to have information that it is by no means certain that a regular Republican can be elected to the Senate from Illinois to succeed David Davis. Latter dispatches, however, from Republican sources, seem to authoritatively refute that claim. Giving Colorado, however, to the Democrats, and Nebraska to the Republicans, the Senate after March 4, next, will stand thirty-seven Republicans, thirty-seven Democrats, and two Readjusters. Mahone and Riddleberger will then have the balance of power, and will be able to dictate terms to whichever party may aspire to the control of the Senate. If, in any of the Western States where the Republican majority small, a combination between Greenbackers, Anti-Monopolists, and Democrats may be successful in electing a United States Senator, as, perhaps, in Nebraska, the Senate in such an event would be tied, even if the two re-adjusters snould vote always with the Republicans. In any event the Republicans and the readjuster allies can not hope to control the Senate except by an extremely narrow margin.

Colonel Christy, counsel for A C Soteldo, under indictment for assault with intent to kill C M Barton, brought the case to the attention of Judge Wiley in the Criminal Court Saturday. Through some misunderstanding of the attorney, the case was not argued, but Colonel Christy asked the court to nolle pros the case, on the grounds that a second indictment against his client was found on the same evidence, and as the jury had acquitted him in one instance, the court should therefore dismiss the other. Judge Wylie said he took a different view, and it would require the citation of authorities to change his opinion.

The Grand Jury to-day returned two bills against B. F. Hackman and Henry Reed, publishers of the Sunday Chronicle, in this city for publishing a libel on Alonzo Bell, late Assistant Secretary of the Interior, on April 25, 1882, and against B. F. Bigelow, late teller of the Bank of the Republic, for the embezzlement of $25,000. In the latter case there were seven separate counts.

Acting Secretary Josylin Tuesday, decided that where a settler has failed to comply with the law in making improvements, but has cultivated the land, and his failure to build is shown to have been caused by climatic influences, he will be allowed a further period of six months within which to establish residences.

In the case of Christian F. Ebinger, of Bloomington, Neb., against Daniel Hearl, Acting Secretary Joslyn to-day decided that Ebinger acquired no right by presentation of his application for timber culture entry, during the vacancy in the office of the receiver, and that consequently the tract in controversy was unappropriated upon the date of Hearl's application. The decision establishes an important precedent, which will govern similar cases.

Engineer Melville to-day continued the account of his land trip, giving no new or interesting points, except to state, in answer to a question, that he believed the trip was made as quickly as could have been done, no unnecessary delays occurring at any point. He was asked the cause of Collins being suspended from duty, and replied that he did not personally know the cause, but said Collins was in his usual health and fit for duty at the time.

Chief of Engineers Wright and Major Haines have submitted to Secretary Lincoln the question of awarding the contract for the improvement of the Potomac flats, and he will in a day or two make the reward, the principle question at issue being as to the responsibility of the bidders.

At the Cabinet meeting to-day no business of importance was transacted The principle topics of discussion were the several reports of the executive officers, their probable contents, etc. The meeting was quite brief Secretary Chandler took occasion to remark that the elections were not discussed.

It is estimated that there will be fifty contested election cases in the House of Representatives of the next Congress.

Bill Arp's Baby Talk.

Atlanta(Ga.) Constitution.

The poet hath said that "a baby in the house is a well spring of pleasure." There is a brand-new one here now, the first in eight years, and it has raised a powerful commotion. It's not our baby, exactly, but it is in the line of descent, and Mrs. Arp takes on over it all the same as she used to when she was regularly in the business. I thought maybe she had forgot how to nurse 'em and talk to 'em, but she is singing the same old familiar songs that have sweetened the dreams of a half a score, and she blesses the little eyes and sweet little mouth, and uses the same infantile language that nobody but babies understand. For she says "tum here to its danmudder," and "bless its 'ittle heart," and talks about its sweet little footsy-tootsies and holds it up to the windows to see the wagons go by and the wheels going roundy-poundy, and now my liberty is curtailing, for as I go stamping around with my heavy farm shoes she shakes her omenous finger at me just like she used to, and says don't you see the baby is asleep, and so I have to tiptoe around, and ever and anon she wants a little fire, or some hot water, or a little catnip, for the baby is a-crying, and surely has got the colic. The doors have to be kept shut now for fear of a draft of air on the baby, and a little hole in the window pane about as big as a dime had to be patched, and I have to hunt up a passel of kin'lings every night, and put 'em where they will be handy, and they have sent me off to another room where the baby can't hear me snore, and all things considered, the baby is running the machine, and the wellspring of pleasure is the center of space.

A grandmother is a wonderful help, and a great comfort at such a time as this, for what does a young mother with her first child know about colic and thrash, and hives, and hiccups, and it takes a good deal of faith to dose 'em with sut tea and catnip, and limewater, and paregoric, and soothing syrup, and sometimes with all of these the child gets worse, and if it gets better I've always had a curiosity to know which remedy it was that did the work. Children born of healthy parents can stand a power of medicine and get over it, for after the cry comes sleep, and sleep is a wonderful restorer.

Rock 'em awhile in the cradle and then take 'em up and jolt 'em a little on the knee, and then turn 'em over and jolt 'em on the other side, and then give 'em some sugar in a rag, and after a while they will go to sleep and let the poor mother rest. There is no patent on this business, no way of raising 'em all the same way, but it is trouble, trouble from the start, and nobody but a mother knows how much trouble it is. A man ought to be a mighty good man just for his mother's sake, if nothing else, for there is no toil or trouble like nursing and caring for a little child, and there is no grief so great as a mother's if all her care and anxiety are wasted on an ungrateful child.

Gilded Youth Of Gotham.

New York Letter.

Men are becoming very luxurios, and their dressing rooms, sitting rooms, wardrobes, and repositories for personal belongings display tastes more costly than those of women. Underwear of the softest, richest knitted silk; dozens of South American pajamas, for night and dressing room wear, of China crepe, soft twilled Chinese silk, cashmere, flannel bound in satin and embroidered, and all the daintiest, most delicate tints and colors, such as ivory, pale blue, pink, buff, or violet. The pajama consists of drawers and loose blouse jacket with sailor collar. When made in ivory they are often faced with a collar and embroidered with ivory silk in a little vine or in the corners of collars and cuffs. If the pajama is in colors it will, perhaps, be embroidered with white or have appliques cut out of white satin cloth or velvet embroidered on. The daintiest of all is in all white pajama of ivory Chinese crepe or silk enriched by hand embroidery, and these are made for the wedding outfits of fashionable men, who will have a dozen of white, a dozen trimmed with color, and a dozen in various delicate colors embroidered in white.

These elegant gentleman have for smoking companions the gate of a country house in nickel or silver, with chain rings, instead of bars to hold cigars upright, and side lights representing gate lamps, but holding candles, and post pedestals to form match holders. These cost from $150 to $250, and are sometimes ornamented with a bird or rooster in the act of crowing. Another recently imported piece of masculine extravagance is a lamp, the lower part of which forms a tripod set upon a double hoof decorated with natural hair. There are two burners representing wax candles under tinted and decorated glass, and the cost for a lamp of this kind is $250. Another lamp has for its standard a horseshoe, with stirrup and riding whip crossed and twisted.

Heroism At Sea.

Phila. Sat. Night.

Fiction never furnished a more thrilling episode than is embodied in the truthful account of the extraordinary adventures of part of the crew of an English vessel. The barque Arracan of Greenock, while on a voyage from Shields to Bombay, in midwinter with a cargo of coals, took fire from the spontaneous combustion of her cargo, and was abandoned by her crew, who then took to their boats, and endeavored to make for the Maldive Islands.

The boats kept company for three days, when finding the current too strong, it was agreed to separate, after dividing provisions. The master, in command of the long boat, then made for Cochin; the mate, in charge of the gig, and the second mate, David Webster, in charge of the pinnace, with four of the crew—namely, three men and one boy—made for the Maldive Islands.

In two days Webster's boat was injured by a heavy sea, and could not keep up with the gig, and lost sight of her. From this time the pinnace was kept working to windward for the space of seventeen days, by which time the provisions and water had been consumed.

Shortly afterward the crew cast lots to see which one of them be first killed to be eaten, and the lot fell upon the ship's boy, Horner; but Webster, who had been asleep, was awakened in in time to save the boy's life.

After dark an attempt was made to kill Webster himself; but the boy Horner awoke him in time to save himself. On the following day, Webster having fallen asleep, was awakened by the struggles of the crew for the possession of his gun, with which to shoot him.

Two hours later the crowd attempted to take Horner's life again, but were prevented by the determined conduct of Webster, who threatened to shoot and throw overboard the first man who laid hands on the boy.

The next day one of the crew attempted to sink the boat, but Webster mastered him and prevented further mischief. Two days later the same member of the crew again tried to sink the boat, and expressed his determination to take the boy's life. For this he would have been shot by Webster had not the cap on the gun missed fire.

Soon after, putting a fresh cap on his gun, a bird flew over the boat, which Webster shot. It was at once seized and devoured by the crew, even to the bones and feathers.

During the next five days the crew were quieter, subsisting on barnacles which attached themselves to the bottom of the boat, and on sea-blubber, for which they dived.

The following day some of the men became delirious. One of them lay down exhausted, when another struck him several blows on the head with an iron belaying-pin, cutting him badly. The blood which flowed was caught in a tin, and drank by the man himself and the two other men.

Afterward they fought and bit one another, and only left off when completely exhausted, to re-commence as soon as they able, the boy Horner, during the time, keeping watch with Webster.

On the thirty-first day in the boat they were picked up, 600 miles from land, by the ship City of Manchester, and taken to Calcutta.

Webster, who by his conduct was the means of saving the lives of all in the boat, had conferred upon him by the queen the Albert medal.

Two Ghost Stories.

New York Sun.

Ghost stories which have suffered an eclipse for some time, appear to be undergoing a revival. Here is one that is entitled to credence, if any are. It is usually only servants or ignorant persons who see ghosts, but in this case the apparition was seen by two persons simultaneously, both of them possessed of more than common vigor of mind.

President Taylor had a sister who was reckoned one of the most gifted women of her day. She was the namesake of Patrick Henry and the pet of Jefferson. She lived with her father, Governor Tyler, at Greenway, in Charles City county, Va. One night, while sleeping in bed with a cousin, a young woman of her age, she awoke and saw her mother, who had been dead for some moths, sitting in the window seat. It was a bright night in summer, and under the window was the bed of a younger sister, an infant at the time of her mother's death. The apparition leaned over the child and gazed intently on it. Miss Tyler remembered to have heard that an apparition would remain as long as the eyes were fixed on it. She looked steadily at it without the least alarm. Now comes the strangest part of the story. The girl, lying by her side, said quietly, "Maria, there is your mother." Then the form melted away.

Some years afterward, after Governor Tyler's death, his daughter was at Greenway again. She was then married, and was visiting the first wife of her brother, President Tyler. He was absent in Washington, being in the Senate. One night one of Mrs. Tyler's children became ill, and her sister-in-law went to the nursery to help take care of it. She suggested that she should get a remedy from her own room, and, taking a candle in her hand, started for it. On her return, as she passed the staircase she saw her father standing before her. The same idea flashed into her mind that she could hold the apparition by her fixed gaze. She observed it carefully, and recognized a certain suit of brown cloth which she had sometimes seen the Governor wear, and she was self-possessed enough to look for a mole on his forehead, which was a birth mark. Mrs. Tyler, after waiting some minutes, called to her to hasten, whereupon the figure vanished.

Shot-Guns for Soldiers.

Several of the late campaigns by regular soldiers against hostile Indians during the past few years have developed the fact that, in a campaign through the uninhabited country of the west, it is very difficult to establish and maintain the communication of supplies. Upon many occasions, therefore, troops have been forced to subsist on hard-tack and other unnutritious food, although they were marching through a country overrun with small game, which the soldiers were unable to kill, by reason of the absence of suitable fire arms. The necessity for a service shotgun having been brought to the attention of Gen. Benet, chief of ordnance, he experimented in the matter, and, as a result, he produced what is known as the Springfield shot-gun. Two of these guns, with ammunition, were issued to each company in certain regiments on the frontier, to enable the soldiers to hunt for birds and small game. The guns have met with such continued favor that a sufficient number are now being manufactured to supply every company west of the Mississippi.—Washington Post.

Moody for Speaker.

We nominate Hon. D. D. Moody for speaker of the next house of representatives. He has made a good record in that body already, and has fully learned his duties and the parliamentary rules necessary for conducting its meetings. He is well known for his clear head, firmness and decision, just the qualities necessary for the position. He is active, energetic and persevering. He is a good debater and a ready and rapid thinker. But there are other qualities that recommend him to the people of his county. He has just made one of the most energetic and brilliant campaigns seen in this part of the state. Against the most bitter and persistent opposition from the opposite party, and even from a part of his own party, he entered upon his canvass with a determination and vim as rare as it was admirable. He made a thorough canvass of the county, and by his ability and earnestness he convinced many of his opponents of their error, and disarmed opposition in his own party. And in all the heat of the strife no ungentlemanly means were used; no ungentlemanly words were heard from his lips, but he came out of the canvass with more friends than when he entered it. He fought a good fight. He has won, and we believe we express the feelings of all his democratic constituents when we say he has earned promotion. So we nominate him for the speakership. Let Northern Indiana stand by him and put him there.

Judge Lowry.

An analysis of the vote of this congressional district must be very flattering to Judge Lowry. He received the greatest majority ever given in his county, numbering 333 ahead of the state ticket. In this county, he ran 64 ahead. In Lagrange county he was 96 ahead, and in Steuben county he ran ahead of his state ticket, 48. In Noble he had only 63 adverse majority while the whole of the democratic ticket was defeated, except commissioners. His majority in the district is 2,845. Two years ago, Mr. Colerick's majority was 772. It is a splendid showing.

GENERAL BUTLER'S campaign for governor in Massachusetts was probably the most lively that occured anywhere in the country. He spoke everywhere for tariff reform, everywhere in the interest of labor and against high protective monopoly tariff tax. He attacked protectionists in their strongest holds, and with a fearlessness of dash that beat down all opposition. He told the laboring men of Massachusetts that the purpose of the monopolists was and always would be to ascertain just how much wages was required to keep soul and body together, and that fact ascertained, the limit of wages was fixed. As a consequence, if the necessities of life are enormeously taxed, then the laborer finds it more difficult to live. If the necessities of life are lightly taxed, or not taxed at all, men who earn their living by their toil would at once discover that the democratic idea of low taxes is for the good of the country.—Sentinel.

THE last two or three days of last week were remarkable for electric disturbances all over the country, and even in Europe. In some places the wires of the telegraph lines would not work, and at one time, Chicago was almost entirely cut off from the rest of the country. In some telegraph offices, the disturbance was so great that operators left the room, and in several instances, the switch boards were heated so as to take fire. At the same time brilliant auroral displays were seen every night. No such marked phenomena of this kind have ever been known before. The lightning was evidently tickled to find itself once more carrying the news of a democratic victory.

Two years ago Mr. M. Koch, of Cleveland, a republican brother-in-law of Max Nirdlinger sent him a silk badge gotten up by the republicans and bearing the exulting words: "Well I should smile! How is Ohio and Indiana?" Mr. Koch is in the city today and Mr. Nirdlinger resurrected his badge and gleefully pinned it in his vest. Mr. Koch saw the point.—Ft. Wayne News.

Santa Claus is said to be putting in a large stock of Noyes Dictionary Holders and Noyes Handy Tables among his holiday supplies for this year. This is well. Noyes, 99 West Monroe St., Chicago.

A Traveler's Story.

After spending months at watering places and consulting the best physicians without benefit, I returned home disheartened and expected to die. A friend urged a trial of Parker's Ginger Tonic. CORRESPONDENCE.

WATERLOO.

Mrs. J. E. Rose and Mrs. E. D. Hartman, of Auburn, were in town Monday visiting friends.

A. S. Leas returned to his home in this place Tuesday, after his residence in Auburn for four years. We are glad to see him back again.

Mrs. P. P. Day is on the sick list.

Prof. Washburne, of Dubuque, Iowa, was the guest of Prof. Harrison over Sunday. Mr. W. is stopping all along his route to his western home to see how the different school systems work, with a view to the improvement of the school which will be under his charge.

They put the new telegraph office into the new depot at the junction here Tuesday.

M. W. Johnson and his mother went to Defiance this week to visit relatives.

Mrs. W. S. Best, of Minneapolis, is here visiting in the family of Judge Best.

Many of our citizens attended the evening lectures at the institute and were well pleased.

It looked natural to see E. S. Patterson and his wife and J. C. Boyer, as well as C. R. Reed and wife in the institute choir.

We have heard the singing at the institute complimented frequently, both in the daytime meetings and the evening.

C. R. Reed and wife, Miss Lydia North, Mrs. Field, Mrs. E. S. Patterson, Wilson Shull and George Staley sang at Miss Vineyard's concert and made excellent music. John Fisher and Wilson Shull played a cornet solo, which was received with applause.

Sam Beck is still buying all the live poultry he can get, if it is of good quality. Give him a chance before you try elsewhere.

Sam Beck returned from New York last week, where he had gone with his stock of poultry. We understand the trip was a successful one.

Miss Vineyard's entertainment was well patronized in spite of the bad weather. She always has a full house here, and those who heard her last Thursday evening are free to admit that she is improving even on her former excellence.

Butt's Hotel has added one more convenience for the comfort of its guests. The gentlemanly proprietor has placed an oil heating stove in the hall on the second floor, and this keeps all the adjoining rooms warm, and is much better than to have a stove in one's room. Mr. Butt leaves no means untried, to make his guests comfortable. All of them not only appreciate this, but every returning guest, feels impelled to come up and give a cordial shake over Mr. Butt's recent election to the recordership. They seem glad as if it were themselves.

The railroad company has put down a platform at the junction, all around the depot building. The ticket office is fairly established there, and the target house moved to the west side of the Jackson track. They also have a work train engaged all the time cutting away the earth on the south side of the Lake Shore track and "Y" and taking it to fill the north side of the L. S. right of way west of the target house. When this is done, there will be a great deal more available ground for their use.

BUTLER.

The new county officers are getting ready to move to the county seat.

The walls of Crane's new brick business block are nearly completed.

The Wabash House is gaining popularity under McNabb's care.

The union meeting under the leadership of all the ministers of town is awakening quite an interest.

Stiefel Bros. are again closing out at auction. There must be something at the bottom of these frequent moves.

The Wabash restaurant has again changed hands. It goes into the hands of another of the Connell boys.

A new coal dock is being erected on the coal dock switch for public use.

John Hazlet has again quietly settled himself upon his upholstered bench in the pump house and says politics can take care of itself.

Joe Ulm died very suddenly last Wednesday and was buried on Thursday. He was a member of the G. A. R. and was buried by its members with the honors of the order. The deceased had a fine new residence nearly completed, when he was stricken down by the hand of death, and literally left his family without a roof over their heads. Some of our good citizens have started a subscription paper to raise money and labor enough to complete the house, and have raised about $50. He leaves a wife and three children.

CONCORD.

Mrs. D. W. Baker and Mrs. E. Speers have returned from their visit in Eaton county, Mich.

Josie Smith attended the institute.

James Johnson has purchased the old homestead formerly owned by J. K. Culbertson.

Melvin Wyatt is slowly recovering from his long illness.

Hank Baker thinks he has the finest dog out; so do we. It cost him the wee sum of $30.

Emma Jenkins is spending a few days in Auburn.

Mrs. Capp, of Ft. Wayne, is visiting her cousin, Mrs. H. E. Simonton.

Herrick & Snyder are busy buying stock.

Orra Griner has returned from Elkhart.

Roy Johnson has the diphtheria.

Mrs. G. W. Draggoo has the neuralgia.

E. White has painted his house, giving it a very neat appearance.

Frank Draggoo was home Sunday.

Rev. Hussey delivered quite an able sermon last sabbath.

Last Monday was a day of merriment at the residence of C. Keller, in honor of their daughter, Mrs. M. White, the married in day time and single in the evening. Presents amounted to over $50.

COMESKY'S CORNERS.

Rainy weather and plenty of mud.

Perry Carnahan is ill with lung fever.

John Dove, after a long stay in Michigan, has returned home to his family.

Church at Hopewell every two weeks.

Singing-school at district No. 9 every Friday night.

The district school commences at Comesky's Corners next Monday morning with Charley Hollouster as teacher.

Sabbath-school at Mt. Olive every Sunday.

HAMILTON.

Thinking it might be of interest to many of your readers in this part of the country, I thought I would write a few lines concerning certain charges against Elder Slusser, pastor of the Hamilton church, and the result of the trial which began Tuesday morning and lasted the greater part of the night, being conducted wholly by ministers chosen for that purpose. After hearing all the evidence pro. and con., it was terminated by a decission (however not the least surprising to those who heard the evidence) of seven ministers in favor of the defendent, they not being able to sustain a charge. Y.

Progressing Finely.

ACTIVE PREPARATIONS FOR THE NATIONAL BAZAAR AT WASHINGTON—THE FULL PROGRAMME PUBLISHED.

The National Bazaar is proving to be well named, as the interest in it is becoming general all over the country. The different states, through their commissioners, are working earnestly in the matter of representative exhibits, and there is no question of the event being a notable one. The preparations within the capitol building are progressing finely, and are upon a most extensive scale. The main rotunda will present a very brilliant scene, and the character of the works of art already sent in indicates that the display in this line will be of the highest order. The old and intimate associates of the lamented Garfield, Major Swain, Col. Cosbin, and others, are closely identified with the Bazaar and they and the whole association of the Army of the Cumberland, under the auspices of which the event is held, are striving to the utmost to make it an unqualified success. The detail of the different days is being rapidly arranged in systematic order, and the days and nights will be one round of interesting celebrations.

The B. & O. has just issued an exceedingly neat and attractive programme of the ten days doings, and it must prove of no ordinary value to those contemplating a visit to Washington. The rates will be so favorable that no doubt many will take advantage of them and go. Washington is always a most interesting city to visit, and with the Bazaar in progress will be doubly attractive.

The B. & O. will take the best of care of all, and as it is the only direct line to Washington, few, if any, will think of going any other way. Agents all along the line will be found to be thoroughly posted as to all the details most desired by the public. It should be remembered that the reduction of rates embraces all points on the main line, all divisions and branches.

—Call on Weirick at Fairfield Center. He keeps all kinds of groceries and family supplies. 46-tf

—"The Lights O' London," one of the greatest and most successful Melo-Dramas of the age, will be given at the Academy of Music, Fort Wayne, Ind., on the 29th and 30th of November and 1st and 2d of December, with Matinees on Thanksgiven and Saturdry afternoons. Excursion rates will be made on all roads running to Fort Wayne, that all may see the latest success.

Notice.

I will sell you a Hamilton Organ, 5 octaves, 8 stops, 4 sets or reeds of 2½ octaves each; 2 knee swells, nice stool, solid walnut case, oil finish for $85.00. Beat it if you dare in price and quality. This offer will stand good until after the holidays. Come and see me or address

Notice of Appropriation Under the Railroad Act.

STATE OF INDIANA, } ss
DEKALB COUNTY. }
In the DeKalb Circuit Court—
The Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway
vs.
William D. Boyle and Alma Boyle, his wife, Thomas Blackwell and Warner Blackwell, William Williams and Matilda Koontz Williams, his wife, Mary Jane Hixon.

Be it remembered that on the 21st day of November, 1882, the above named plaintiff, the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific Railway, by Charles B. Stuart, W. V. Stuart and James E. Rose, its attorneys, filed in the office of the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court its instrument of appropriation in writing, in pursuance of an act of the General Assembly of the state of Indiana, entitled, "An Act for the Incorporation of Railroad Companies, approved May 11th, 1852," against said William D. Boyle, Alma Boyle, his wife, Thomas Blackwell and Warner Blackwell, William Williams and Matilda Koontz Williams, his wife, and Mary Jane Hixon; and also the affidavit of a competent person that said defendants, William Williams and Matilda Koontz Williams, are non-residents of the State of Indiana. Said instrument of appropriation gives notice to said defendants and to all persons claiming any right, title or interest in or to the property hereinafter described, of its intention to appropriate, the lands and water running thereon, and the rights and interests therein, hereinafter described, to-wit:

A strip of land two hundred and seventy (270) feet wide off of the south end of the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of Section 10, Township 34 north, range 14 east, containing eight and sixteen one hundredths (8.16) acres more or less. Also a part of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of Section 10, Township 34 north, range 14 east, to-wit: Beginning at a stake in the line north and south through the center of Section 10, one hundred and thirty (130) feet south of the center of said section; thence west four hundred and seventy-nine (479) feet to the line between William H. Madden and William D. Boyle; thence south along said line six hundred and ninety (690) feet to the corner of the land of William H. Madden and Adam Smith in William D. Boyle's line; thence east four hundred and seventy-nine (479) feet, to the line north and south through the center of Section 10; thence north along said line six hundred and ninety (690) feet, to the beginning, containing seven and fifty-nine hundredths (7.59) acres more or less, being a part of Section 10, Township 34 north, range 14 east, in said County of DeKalb, State of Indiana.

Said real estate so described is necessary for said railroad company, for the purpose of a water station, side tracks and depot grounds. And plaintiff also filed with said instrument of appropriation in said clerk's office a plat and outline of the property above described.

And said railway, not having agreed with the owners for the purchase of said property, has taken this course in accordance with the provisions of said act hereintofore mentioned. Said non-resident defendants are also notified that on Thursday, the 21st day of December, 1882, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, the said Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific railway will apply to the Hon. E. Wes. McBride, Judge of the DeKalb Circuit Court, at the court-house in Auburn, DeKalb County, State of Indiana, for the appointment of appraisers to assess the damages which said defendants and all other persons claiming any right title or interest in or to said real estate, will sustain by the appropriation of the property above described for the purposes within stated.

Witness my hand and the seal of said court, affixed at Auburn, DeKalb County, State of Indiana, on the 21st day of November, 1882.

(SEAL.) JOHN W. BAXTER, Clerk.

LOADED, LOADED, LOADED,

With all kinds of Heavy Goods. The continuance of warm weather has placed heavy goods of every description at a discount. People will not buy until a change of weather forces them to do so. This state of affairs forces us to offer

Laocl and Miscellaneous.

—J. C. Henry has gone to Chicago, to buy goods.

—Gents' underwear 50 cents a suit at Mrs. Jones & Son's.

—All sorts of jewelry at low rates, at Bassett & Maxon's in Waterloo.

—D. D. Snyder attended the railroad meeting at Warsaw Tuesday.

—Mr. McBride, the newly elected judge was on our streets this week.

—For gloves, mittens, caps, scarfs and underwear go to McQuiston & Long's. 45-3t.

—The new bridge, east of the court house, is rappidly approaching completion.

—There is a new jewelry store in the room with Straw, the dealer in musical instruments. Did not learn the name.

—J. M. Gœtschius is the first man who has paid his subscription up to a point, that reads 1884. That looks like business.

—Pleasant Lake regulators propose to do a little watching and see that no more attempts are made to fire the mill there.

—Get ready for the holidays by giving a chance to Bassett & Maxson, at Waterloo, Ind.

Wanted.—A dinning room girl at Butt's hotel, Waterloo. Apply early by letter or person. tf.

—See the new ad. of Lowenstein & Rotschild in this issue. They are doing a splendid business.

—Weirick, at Fairfield Center, will buy your Butter and eggs, poultry and everything you have to sell. 46-4t

Miss Winnie Amsden, Moody's Building, Indianapolis says "Brown's Iron Bitters cured me of indigestion."

—Sam Beck, of Waterloo, is still buying good live poultry and asks all who have any to sell, to give him a call.

—The remaining goods, of the late James Quince at St. Johns, will be sold on Saturday. See the advertisement of it in this paper.

—People are busy this fine weather getting ready for winter, as it is liable to sweep down on us as suddenly as the democratic victory did.

—Mack & Mike open the season with a rousing advertisement this week. They have started out to win and propose to "Get there Eli."

—Cyrus Kelley and Williard Fee, of Smithfield, dropped in to see us Monday. Both are looking as if the recent political cyclone agreed with them.

—Mrs. Louis Johnson took some pains to send a copy of last week's Courier to friends in Pennsylvania to let them see what a first-class Hoosier paper is.

Married.—At the residence of the bride's parents, by Rev. W. O. Butler, November 19th, 1882, Willis A. Danuells to Miss Dora B. Collins, both of this county.

—The new sidewalk at the corner of Main and 4th street is a great improvement, as well as a great comfort to those who have to walk down that way on a dark night.

—The editor's family acknowledge a pleasant call from Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Imhoff, of Waterloo. As they were at one time our near neighbors, the visit was a most pleasant one.

—The racket's commenced. Ike Ochs takes the lead. He smiles at competition, and sells the goods. Prices will do it. Business red hot at both his immense stores.

—Mr. Boyle as sheriff and Mr. Tomlinson auditor, were sworn in on Monday, and on Wednesday, they moved over to town and took possession of their respective offices. We have not yet learned who their assistants will be.

—Our friend Jacob Kandel came around during our temporary absence last Saturday and left us a most generous supply of potatoes and other fine vegetables. We can assure our friend that we appreciate his kindness highly.

—Root & Company, of Fort Wayne, come out in a new advertisement this week and talk to the readers of the Courier in regard to their splendid assortment. Don't forget to look at their list.

—D. T. Spriggs, the cattle man, got there at last. We see by the Angola Herald, that he got some premiums at Ligonier, and is now jubilating in the county papers. He may have good stock, but seems to be making himself rather conspicuous about it.

—H. J. Long, formerly of the Kendallville Standard, was in town Monday calling on his friends here. He expects soon to start a first-class job office in Kendallville. We believe he will do well, as he is a first-rate job printer.

—We have received from the great Rochester seed house of Hiram Sibley & Co. a fine package of their choice bulbs, which came in good shape. This house is now doing the largest business in shipping tulip, hyacinth and similar bulbs of any firm in the country.

—Big reductions in dress goods, at Isaac Ochs'. Profits taken clear off.

The Last Sad Scene.

Our readers will remember the mention made in these columns of the sudden disappearance from his home, in this place, of Mr. Joseph Shilling, early in October. The letter received from him then was dated at Detroit, Oct. 5, saying they need look for him no further. And now comes the sad sequel. Five days later, his body was found in the Detroit river, five miles below Detroit, near Sandwich, on the Canada side. He was taken from the water and buried by the proper authorities. Soon afterwards, an account of the finding of the body, was noticed in a Detroit paper, by Dr. Raub, once a resident of Auburn, but now located near Ft. Wayne. It at once occurred to him that the drowned man described in the paper was Mr. Shilling and he came up to Auburn, and called on the relatives of the missing man, who proceeded to investigate the matter. Becoming satisfied that the right clue had been found, his son Benton Shilling, and other parties from this place went up to Detroit Monday, and had the body taken up. It was recognized at once, and brought home. The burial took place here on Tuesday. Next Sunday, the funeral sermon will be preached at the Baptist church. Mr. Shilling, as mentioned before, was in good circumstances, and no reason appears for his strange course.

—Silks, satins, rhadames, moire cashmeres, plushes and cloakings at tremendous bargains, at Ike Ochs, grand dry goods emporium.

—We have received the winter number of Ehrich's Fashion Quarterly, and hasten to apprise the ladies of the fact, for they watch its coming as astronomers do the appearance of a new comet. Undoubtedly it is the leading paper of its kind in the United States.

Now is the time to treat Catarrh of long standing. Ely's Cream Balm reaches old and obstinate cases, when all other remedies fail. Do not neglect procuring a bottle, as in it lies the relief you seek. Price 50 cents. Apply into nostrils with little finger. 2t.

—J. M. Somers, of Waterloo, will go into the law business with Frank Roby for a partner. The promotion of Mr. McBride to the bench will give these young men a fine chance to get into practice. We wish them abundant success.

—Frank Brink has been lying quite sick, at J. W. Baxter's. His diseased foot has been getting so much worse that serious fears are entertained of blood poisoning. It might be added that Mrs. Brink presented her husband with a bouncing baby about a week ago.

—Township institutes for Smithfield and Union will be held in Waterloo, Saturday Dec. 2, at 10 a. m. In Jackson township, at the Center, on Saturday Dec. 9, and at Franklin Center, Dec. 16. All the teachers of these townships will be expected to assist, and they should begin to prepare for the work at once.

—New subscribers keep coming in and putting their names on our list, and last week we had to increase our order for paper. We are now running a regular edition of more than thirteen hundred. It is also in order, to express thanks to so many of our friends who have brought us new cash subscribers. We hope to "get even" with them some time. For the present, thanks.

Removed.—On account of poor health, I have moved my office to my residence on West Seventh Street, near the railroad. The partial partnership heretofore existing between Mr. Thos. H. Sprott and myself has been dissolved by mutual consent. Soliciting business in my line at the above named place, I am respectfully yours,

Geo. B. Zimmerman,
Fire Insurance Agt. and Notary Public.

—Bassett & Maxson, the jewelers of Waterloo, are getting in a full line of holiday goods, such as watches, clocks, jewelry, silver and plated ware, and propose to sell them at rock bottom prices. So every one may get ready to make his friends a suitable present at a reasonable rate. Don't forget to call on them at Waterloo.

—Religious services will be held at the Baptist church Thanksgiving day, at half-past ten o'clock. The following order of exercises has been arranged for the occasion:

1st.—Music by the choir.
2d.—Reading the scriptures by Rev. W. H. Daniels.
3d.—Prayer by Rev. S. Kelso.
4th.—Music.
5th—Sermon by Rev. J. D. McCord.
6th—Prayer by Rev. S. B. Ward.
7th—Music.

The choir of the M. E. church is requested to furnish the music for that occasion. A general invitation is given to the citizens of Auburn and its surroundings to express their gratitude to the Bountiful Giver of all Good by being present at the above mentioned union services.

—Overcoats and suits, for men and boys, at less than auction prices, at Ike Ochs' excellent clothing house. Ensley's block Auburn.

—18 yards knickerbocker, good styles, for $1.00. 25 yards of calico for $1.00, at Isaac Ochs'.

County Institute Continued.

Wednesday morning was a continuation of the work of B. B. Harrison in diagrams in grammar, accompained by practical instructions as to how these should be taught. Miss Vineyard followed, by teaching a class how to read the lesson on page 217 of McGuffey's fifth reader, and showed how words and thoughts must be studied before pupils can read well. Cyrus Smith followed in a few well chosen remarks, after which Prof. Luke continued his remarks on history. Many of the trustees were present during the forenoon session. In the afternoon they held a meeting in Butt's Hotel and made partial arrangements for township institutes. B. B. Harrison had charge of the institute, during the absence of the superintendent, and Mr. Coe continued his lesson in percentage. The pupils of his class showed excellent training. Miss Vineyard then called her class, and read the lesson on page 231 in the fifth reader. She closed by reciting a piece called "School Friendship" in her usual brilliant way. Dr. Russell then finished his lesson in physiology, his subject being "The Special Senses." His illustrations of the eye, ear &c. were perfect, and created a great interest. His lecture in the evening was attended, by both teachers and citizens of the place. Thursday morning, Mr. Harrison concluded his series of lessons in grammar, and was followed by John M. Olcott, of Indianapolis, in a talk to the teachers. Mr. Sanders principal of the Butler school then gave a lecture on "The International Date Line" which gave the institute many new ideas on this interesting subject, and showed that the lecturer was master of the situation. Miss Vineyard followed with her last reading lesson. In the afternoon M. W. Harrison gave a practical lesson on mensuration, and showed the rules we use were drawn from the teachings of geometry, and gave illustrations of his work. Mr. Sanders then gave his first lesson on the "Metric System of Weights and Measures," which he illustrated by the use of a scale, and the weights and measures themselves. Dr. Russell followed with his closing lesson. In the evening Miss Vineyard gave an entertainment to a crowded house, although the weather was extremely bad. Friday morning, Mr. Sanders continued his lesson on the metric system and showed the whole subject so plainly, by the use of his charts and apparatus, but all went away feeling they understood the subject better than ever before. Miss Rose Omo, principal of the Newville school followed with a sensible talk on mental arithmetic, and Mr. Harrison, of Auburn, spoke on the subject of school government. A resolution of thanks was then passed thanking the citizens of Waterloo for their hospitality, and the choir and lecturers for their assistance. B. B. Harrison offered a resolution which passed unanimously asking the next legislature for a more liberal appropriation to pay the expenses of the county institutes. Prof. Washburne, of Massachusetts who is to take charge of the public schools at Dubuque, Iowa, addressed the teachers for a short time. Afternoon an hour was passed in general discussion, and informal talks. Institute adjourned at 2:30 p. m. after one of the most pleasant and profitable sessions ever held in the county. The number enrolled was 162.

ENTERTAINING HER BIG SISTERS BEAU

BRET HARTE.

"My sister'll be down in a minute, and says you're to wait, if you please;
And says I might stay till she came, if I'd promise never to tease,
Nor speak till you spoke to me first. But that's nonsense, for how would I know
What she told me to say, if I didn't? Don't you really and truly think so?

"And then you'd feel strange here alone! And you wouldn't know just where to sit;
For that chair isn't strong on its legs, and 'we' never use it a bit
We keep it to match with the sofa. But Jack says it would be just like you
To flop yourself right down upon it and knock out the very last screw.

'Spose you try? I won't tell. You're afraid to! O! you're afraid they would think it was mean!
Well then, there's the album—that's pretty, if your fingers are clean,
For sister says sometimes I daub it; but she only says that when she's cross.
There's her picture. You know it? It's like her; but she ain't as good-looking of course!

"This is me. It's the best of 'em all. Now, tell me, you'd never have thought That once I was little as that? It's the only one that could be bought—
For that was the message to pa from the photograph man where I sat—
That he wouldn't print off any more till he first got his money for that.

What? Maybe you're tired of waiting. Why often she's longer than this.
There's all her back hair to do up and all her front curls to frizz.
But it's nice to be sitting here talking like grown people, just you and me.
Do you think you'll be coming here often? Oh, do! But don't come like Tom Lee.

"Tom Lee? Her last beau. Why, my goodness He used to be here day and night.
Till the folks thought he'd soon be her husband; and Jack says that gave him a fright.
You won't run away, as he did? For you are not a rich man, they say;
Pa says you're as poor as a church-mouse. Now, are you? And how poor are they?

"Ain't you glad that you met me? Well, I am; for I know your hair isn't red.
But what there is left of it's mousy, and not what that naughty Jack said.
But there! I must go. sister's coming' But I wish I could wait, just to see
If she ran up to you and kissed you in the way that she used to kiss Lee."

THE HAND OF FATE

Intolerant skepticism and intolerant belief are only the two extremes of the same thing. There is a fanaticism in unbelief not less absolute than the fanaticism which established the Inquisition or lighted the fires of Smithfield. La Harpe, the celebrated materialist, is said to have fought a duel with a friend who had asserted the existence of his own conscience. Such a skeptical fanatic was I at the date of events I am about to relate. I was president of a society for the prevention of superstition. I believed in nothing beyond of my ken of five senses. I was a furious enemy of dreams, omens, presentments, ghosts and spirits. I was not likely, therefore, to have been misled by superstitious credulity or perverse imagination in regard to the circumstances.

I was living in bachelor lodgings in a quiet street in the upper part of the city. I went little into society, and had few friends. I spent most of my evenings, consequently, in the seclusion of my room, with no company but my books.

One autumn evening I reached home at a late hour, but feeling no desire to sleep I lighted my lamp and sat down by the table for the purpose of finishing a volume I had been reading. It was a dissertion on a favorite subject of mine, namely: The physical causes of dreams and apparitions, the author tracing all spectral appearance to illusions brought about by disordered nervous functions. I was deeply interested, and read on steadily until after midnight.

Suddenly and with out any warning my light flickered and went out. For a moment the room was in intense darkness. I had drawn the curtains before the windows, and the fire in the grate had died down long before. Just as I was on the point of impatiently rising to relight my lamp, I was nailed to my chair by a strange phenomenon. Against the opposite wall of my room a faint glow of light began to appear. In shape it was like the circular patch which is thrown by a camera upon a screen. It continued to increase in brilliancy until the whole room was in a glare of light equal to noonday. It was as if a circular window had been cut in the wall, admitting the full power of the sun.

For an instant surprise held me dumb and motionless: then I arose, and, going to the wall, placed my hand upon the patch of light. I observed that my hand cast no shadow, and that, therefore, the light could not come from behind me. Puzzled, but by no means alarmed, I went back to my chair, calmly resolved to watch the matter to its conclusion.

For a moment the light remaind clear and steady; then a slight mist seemed to over spread it. Out of the mist by slow degrees, a picture was evolved. There was a wide, deep river, crossed by a railroad bridge, in the foreground. I could see here and there a vessel drifting idly with the tide, for it appeared to be a still, warm day. In the distance the hills looked blue and hazy. There were white clouds in the sky, and at a distance the smoke from a town on the river bank rose lazily into the air.

I could note and memorize every detail—the color of the wooden trestle of the railroad bridge; the shape and number of the signal boards; the peculiar arrangement of the telegraph wires. In fact, I could have sworn that I sat before an open window looking upon a material landscape of real sky, earth and water. I noted, too, particularly, a weak spot near the center of the bridge. The bed of the road seemed to have warped, and several of the sleepers were decayed and loosened. I even said, unconsciously:

"There will be a terrible accident at that point some day."

While I was gaping at the apparition with sensations impossible to describe, I observed the smoke of an approaching train. It rushed swiftly around a curve and upon the bridge with unabated speed. I was conscious of a feeling of intense interest in it. I felt very much like a person witnessing a drama with high-wrought emotions, breathlessly watching the action which is drawing toward the tragic denouement.

On came the train. I counted the cars; there were sixteen—four of a yellowish color and the remainder of a red. I saw upon their sides the words, "Northern New York and Canada R. R." I saw that the engine's number was 12, and that the engineer, leaning out of the window toward me, had a large red face and a heavy black beard.

As the train came upon the bridge there seemed to be a sudden jar and stoppage. The engine leaped into the air like a frightened horse and rolled off the bridge, followed by six of the cars. There was an intense movement of alarm and horror, a shower of fire and a cloud of steam which, for a moment, hid everything from sight.

For a moment afterward my attention was irresistibly drawn to two figures struggling in the water. One was a girl, very young and beautiful, attired in a gray traveling suit. She had lost her bonnet, and her long, fair hair was floating out upon the water.

The other figure was that of a man, whose appearance gave me a shock of strange surprise. I seemed to recognize him, though his face was turned away. At first he seemed to be making preparations to strike out vigorously toward the shore. Then he seemed to catch sight of the young girl, for he turned, and swimming toward her, supported her on one arm, while with the other he kept both of them afloat.

At this moment I caught sight of his face. I started up, and uttered a shout of absolute terror. It was my own face, white and stern with excitement and resolution, that I saw before me.

As if my voice had broken the spell, the light, landscape, wrecked train and struggling swimmers disappeared like a flash of lightning. I rubbed my eyes and looked around. The light was burning brightly as before. The book I had been reading had slipped from my hand to the floor. I perceived then that I had been merely dreaming a vivid dream.

To say that I was not startled would be untrue. I was very much moved, but it was neither with superstitious fear nor the slightest faith. Here, I thought, was a grand opportunity to put my favorite theories into practice. I had dreamed a dream of such distinctness and detail that it might readily be supposed to be a forewarning. That it would prove to be nothing of the sort I was perfectly convinced. I would write down the circumstances, and when the event had proven them wholly false, use the whole as a knockdown argument against all faith in any forewarnings whatsoever.

On further investigation I confessed that I was somewhat perplexed. I found that there was such a railroad as Nothern New York and Canada, that the cars were of the color seen in my dream. I found, furthermore, on conversing with a person who had traveled over the route, that the road crossed the Black river on a trestle-bridge, and that, viewed up the river, the landscape would appear about as I had seen it.

I was by no means, conviced, however. I might have heard of the railroad in question and forgotten the fact. The color of the cars was such as is common to railroads. The landscape may have borne only a general resemblance to the Black river; moreover, my description of the one seen in my dream could at most have given only a few salient points, such as hills, water, a distant town and a trestle bridge, common to a hundred other regions in the country.

Moreover, I could imagine no reason why I should travel over the route. My parents live in Northern New York, but in visiting them my course would be at least a hundred mile east of the Black River.

The winter passed by with no renewal of my strange dream and the occurrence of no circumstance bearing upon it, and the whole matter passed out of my memory.

One morning I received a telegram from home to the effect that my father had been taken dangerously ill, and that his physician despaired of his life.

Skeptic as I was, I was no infidel in the matter of family affection. I made my preparations in haste, and took the night train for my father's home. On arriving at Utica, I learned that a freshet had washed out the track of the regular line, and that I should be compelled to take a branch road a score of miles further west.

My dream now occurred to me. I was traveling near the region I had dreamed of. One accident had forced me nearer to it than I had any reason to anticipate. But I was not foolish enough to suppose that any set of circumstances would bring about the fulfillment of my vision.

During the night the train halted at a large town on the line and the passengers were informed that another transfer would be necessary. The rains which had destroyed the track of the regular line had also thrown down a bridge on the branch.

As I alighted in the dark and made my way to the train in waiting, I admit that I was very much startled to read upon the side of the cars the words I had seen in my dream, "Northern New York and Canada R. R." I counted the cars; they were sixteen in number—four yellow and twelve red.

My philosophy was considerably shaken. It seemed as if an irresistible hand was forcing me to the fulfillment of my dream. But I was still stubborn in my unbelief.

I resolved to investigate the matter still further and satisfy myself that I had simply met with a series of coincidences. Freshets might occur on railroads without the special intervention of destiny. Cars might be of a certain color and number without proving dreams to be true.

At the earliest peep of dawn I went through every car on the train, earnestly scanning the passenger's faces. I was looking for the young girl in the grey traveling suit. I was highly elated to discover that no such person was on board. Here was one point in in my favor.

But very shortly this one point was opposed by two others of a very startling kind.

During the halt in the forenoon I alighted and went forward to the engine. There upon the brass plate on its side was the number 12. And as the engineer leaned from the window I was stunned to recognize the man in the dream, the red face and black beard.

I went back to my seat in a maze of wonder and dread. My incredulity was oozing out at my fingers' ends.

Just as the train was about to start a carriage drove furiously up to the station and a late passenger was assisted aboard one of the forward cars as the wheels began to move. It was a woman, whose face I could not see, for she wore a veil, but her dress was of a light gray color and her figure that of a young girl.

By this time I was thoroughly unnerved. I dared not go forward and endeavor to catch a glimpse of the girl's face. I threw myself back into the corner of my seat and fell into a moody reverie. But, meantime, I gathered from the conversation of two passengers in the seat before me that we were to cross the Black river before noon on a trestle bridge.

Presently the landscape on either side began to look strangely familiar. I caught glimpses of hills in the distance that seemed not new to me. A moment later, as the train passed through a cutting and came in sight of the river, I started up in terror. I beheld the landscape of my dream. The wide, deep current, the hazy hills, the trestle bridge, the pale blue sky with its motionless clouds, the drooping sails of the vessels and the distant town with its dun vapor rising into the air—I had seen them all before.

I was now prepared for the full realization of my dream. The last thread of unbelief had broken. I sprang out upon the platform as the train ran upon the trestles and waited breathlessly for the crash I knew was coming.

The train ran on smoothly until it reached the center of the bridge, then there was a hideous jar, an explosion, a chaos of shouts, shrieks and crashes, and I found myself in the water swimming for life.

In an instant I remembered the conclusion of my dream. I turned about, and there, within a dozen feet of me floated the figure in gray, with her long hair spread out upon the water and her beautiful eyes turned toward me in terrified appeal. My dream had not told me whether I was to escape or die in my attempt to rescue the girl. But I never thought of that. I swam toward her, and passing my arm about her, struck out toward the shore.

It was a long and desperate struggle. The river was wide and the current swift. I could make little progress with my inert burden. I struggled on, growing weaker and weaker with every stroke. Presently I saw a boat pulling toward us. I uttered a shout and was answered. In another moment my companion was drawn into the vessel, and, utterly overcome by my terrible efforts, I sank back into the water insensible.

When I awoke to consciousness I was lying in bed, and some one was bending over me. It was a woman and she was weeping. I could feel her tears falling upon my forehead as she brushed back my damp hair. Presently the mist cleared away from my sight, and I recognized the young girl I had rescued—the girl I had seen in my dream.

She uttered a cry of joy when she saw my eyes were open. She seized my hand and pressed it convulsively.

"Thank heaven!" she said, "you will live."

"Yes," said I, with a feeble smile, since it is of importance to you."

"I should never be happy again," she sobbed, "if you were to die after what you have done for me."

Being very ill, yet anxious to reach my father, I resolved to get on at once. Finding me determined to proceed, my young friend insisted on accompanying me me the short distance I had to go. It is needless to relate the details of the remainder of my journey; how, when I arrived, I found my father in a fair way to recovery, or how, in the natural course of events, I fell in love with my beautiful nurse.

When I returned to the city with my young wife my friends discovered that I had left my skepticism in the depths of the Black river. I dissolved my connection with the "Anti-superstition society," not without considerable jeering, which I could afford to receive. I am now convinced that there are things in this world that our raw logic will not account for. My clearest proof is the dear wife whose life I led to save for myself by the irresistible hand of fate.

Hard on the Engineer.

An engineer on the Ohio and Mississippi railroad tells the following story on himself: One night the train stopped to wood and water at a small station in Indiana. While this operation was going on I observed two green looking countrymen, in "homespun," curiously inspecting the locomotive and occasionally giving vent to expressions of astonishment. Finally one of them looked up at me and said:

"Stranger, are this a locomotive?"

"Certainly. Didn't you ever see one before?"

"No, havn't never seen one afore. Me'n Bill come down to the station tonight purpose to see one. Them's the biler, ain't it?"

"Yes, certainly."

"What yer call that you're in?"

"We call this the cab."

"And this big wheel?"

"That's the driving wheel."

"That big black thing on top is the chimbly, I suppose."

"Precisely."

"Be you the engineer wot runs the machine?"

"I am the engineer."

"Bill," said" the fellow to his mate, after eyeing me close for a few minutes, "it don't take much of a man to be engineer, do it?"

"All aboard!"

Mutual Friends.

A wealthy Austin gentleman, whose name we suppress on account of his family, and who has got a frisky wife, observed that his hired man had bought an entirely new suit of clothes, and had had his beard dyed.

"What a ridiculous idea that is for you to be fixing up that way" said the gentleman.

"Well," said the hired man "you dye your mustache, and dress up, too."

"I know that, but I do it to please my wife."

"Well, ain't that what I do it for?"

A BASTARD DUKE.

The father of the Foolish Young Duc de Morny.

Paris Letter to the Philadelphia Times.

The young Duc de Morny, in whose apartments the Russian actress Feyghine shot herself recently in Paris, is a son of the celebrated Minister of Louis Napoleon. The elder Duke was almost certainly a half-brother of the Emperor, Hortense Beauharnais, Louis' mother, being generally recognized as standing in the same relation to de Morny, though who his father was is a matter of grave historic doubt, the distinction being generally conceded to General the Count de Flahault, who, after his intimacy with Queen Hortense and during his exile in England, married the daughter of Admiral Keith. The young Imperialist was secretly legally adopted by a French resident of Mauritius, the Count de Morny, whose name was conferred on the boy for a consideration of a million francs, but Count de Flahault's mother reared and educated him. Talleyrand marked the brightness of the youth and predicted that he would one day be minister to France. The young count entered the army and served with distinction in Africa, and was decorated, but at the age of twenty-seven resigned, and successfully established the best sugar industry in France and realized an immense fortune. He went into politics and played the role of monarchist until his adventurous half-brother, Louis, was elected president, and then became the coup d'etat. On the memorable first of December de Morny, as usual, issued tickets to the ministerial galleries of the assembly for the next day's session, and in the evening at the opera a lady remarked, "They say the assembly is going to be cleaned out."

"In that case," replied the count, "I shall take care to be on the side of the broom."

The elder de Morny was the pillar of the second empire. He was devoted to Louis Napoleon, whom he strongly resembles in person and who owed much to his cool courage and dextrous political management. In "The Nabob", Daudet has given, in the Duc de Mora, an almost perfect picture of de Morny's political life, his personal luxury, gallantries and, finally, of his death, which took place in 1865, three years after he had been made a duke. The accuracy of the sketch is due to the fact that Daudet was for some years the duke's private secretary and had the best possible opportunity to study the strange phases of life which appeared under Morny's roof. At the age of 46, while Ambassador at St. Petersburg, whither he had gone to represent Napoleon at the coronation of the late Czar, de Morny married a princess of the famous family of Troubetskoi and the fruit of the union was the young jackanapes to whom, by the inexplicable magic of passion and sentiment, the beautiful Feyghine sacrificed her genius, her honor and her life.

The young de Morny had been known for several years as a mere sybarite, conspicuous among the haut gomme of Paris for his lavish use of money, and for the total lack of all the intellectual qualities which characterized his father as well as for his possession, in an exaggerated degree, of all the old duke's penchant for fast living. The young man attained his majority but three or four years ago, and was induced by his friends to take a journey to America in the hope that travel and observation would enlarge his sphere of thought and lead him to enter politics or some other useful career at home. He "did the states pretty thoroughly and was particularly interested in the oil and coal regions in Pennsylvania, where he actually consulted his agent about making some investments. During his stay at one of the hotels at Bradford his valet mounted guard day and night over a mysterious, padlocked box, which, as the young duke subsequently confided to a newspaper reporter, contained his celebrated toilet set of twelve pieces from wash-bowl and pitcher down to soap dish and pomatum pot, all of solid silver in the finest repousse.

A Nautical Explanation.

Chamber's Journal.

In a dancing saloon one night a sailor was asked by a messmate to explain to him in a few words and as quick as possible the third figure of a quadrille. His description was as follows:

"You first of all heave ahead," said he, "and pass your adversary's yard-arms; then in a jiffy regain your berth on the other tack in the same kind of order; slip along sharp and take your station with your partner in line; back and fill, and then fall on your heel, and bring up with your craft. She then maneuvers ahead off alongside of you; then make sail in company with her until nearly astern of the other line; make a stern board; cast her off to shift for herself; regain your place out of the melee in the best manner you can, and let go your anchor."

Two Honored Graves.

Staff Correspondence of Philadelphia Press.

I stood beside two old graves to-day in Monongahela, that are in the shadow of the Catholic church that so quickly recalled to me Longfellow's beautiful lines. The marble that marked them was much newer than the mounds, and the surroundings impressed me with the thought that a dutiful and reverent son had years after, when means and opportunity came that were wanting when death called father and mother, placed a fitting monument to mark the spot where they slept. It is a plain, unpretentious stone that marks these graves and it was the names only that attracted my attention. They were those of Ephraim L. Blaine and Maria Gillespie Blaine.

"Was Ephriam Blaine a Catholic?" I asked of one old gentleman who accompanied me to that quiet city of the dead.

"No, indeed; all the Blaines were Protestants, but all the Gillespies were strong Catholics. That's why Eph was buried beside his wife in the Catholic graveyard. No, Eph Blaine didn't belong to any church; he was too fond of his fun. I remember when he was running for prothonotary of this county his opponents charged him with being a Catholic so as to arouse the Protestant element against him. There was a Catholic priest living here then by the name of Father McGuire. He and Eph Blaine were the best of friends but he didn't go much on Eph's piety. To him Blaine applied for a certificate that he was not a member of his church. The priest, who was somewhat of a wag, but withal a splendid man, gave him a paper which read;

"This is to certify that Ephraim L. Blaine is not now nor never has been a member of the Catholic church, and furthermore, in my opinion, he is not fit to be a member of any church."

This document pleased Blaine very much, and he often showed it to his friends years after it had the desired effect in his campaign for the county office. When Eph was elected prothonotary he left here and moved to Washington. James G. was then a good sized boy."

"Were there any other children?"

"Yes; four sons and one daughter. I don't think they ever made much of themselves."

"Do the Blaines or any of the relatives own the old homestead?"

"No, indeed. It's long since passed into strange hands. There was little of either the Blaine or the Gillespie estate left when the settlement day came. The children all had to begin new. None of either family live about here now."

There are stories to the effect that the course of true love did not run smoothly with James G., and some say that is why he left the deaf and dumb school in Philadelphia, where he was teaching, and took up his abode in Kentucky. The party most disappointed has never wedded, but has rather devoted her life to self-denying charity. For twenty years and by the irony of fate in the capital of the Nation, has she followed the path of an undeviating Christian life, devoted to careful attention upon suffering humanity, doubtless watching with a careful eye his steadily advancing steps, and perhaps often sitting under the spell of his eloquence without his ever knowing that the being whose presence was once the chief charm of life was even living.

New York City at Its Best.

New York Letter in the Buffalo Express.

This magnificent Autumn weather, clear, warm and lovely, is fast winning home from their wanderings the many people prominent in the world of wealth and fashion who love to loiter among the mountains or by the sea after the excursion army has ended its annual march, and naught is heard ave the patter of falling leaves, or the murmur of the waves dashing on the coast. I can't say that the seasons have changed, but certainly September is much more close and muggy in New York these later seasons than it was twenty years ago; and while existence, despite the heat, is quite tolerable here during July and August, thanks to the southwesterly breezes which seem to rise and fall with the thermometer, with the advent of September I eagerly speed away to the far eastward coast till the chestnut burrs open.

AN ARMY MOVING BY SIDEWALK.

New York is now seen at its best. Down town the immensity of the Fall traffic is well revealed by the solid, endless procession of trucks and drays laden with every species of merchandise under the sun, and blocking up the streets so completely that it is quite as much as one's life is worth to attempt crossing any street on foot. The sight-seeing pedestrian has indeed a hard time of it. Once committing himself to the tender mercies of the throng which pack the sidewalk to the curb, he vainly tries to get something more than a glimpse of the buildings he is passing. If he pauses, he is promptly knocked down and walked over by the crowd pressing at his back, and, in frantic efforts to clear himself from the down line of Scylla, he dashes fatally on the up line of Charybdis. After being thrown out on a side street several times and thus reliably ascertaining that there is some casual meaning in the admonition, "Keep to the right," he soon acquires the habit of walking down on one side of the street and walking up the other, and after a week's active investigation is rather apt to know more about the streets and buildings than New Yorkers themselves, who always ride, and, as suits their purses, in all manner of vehicles, from the small coupe with the man in tops to the 5 cent horse car with its seedy driver.

A FEMININE PARADISE.

I presume there was not a day last week when there were less than 100,000 male adult visitors walking the streets up and down town. Add the women and children who accompanied many of them—and it makes an army. Most of the men come only for a few hours visit. Walk every day at noon from Union and Madison Squares to Forty-second street, and you will rarely meet the same man twice. But when it comes to lovely women, if sight and memory are equally bright, you will meet her somewhere between Union Square and the Park for at least three consecutive days; as, unlike the sterner sex, she scorns a cheap visit between daylight and dark, and comes not except in the modish way. Nothing less than three days at a first-class hotel, which ordinarily means three mornings' shopping (what is known in men as loafing), two afternoons in Central Park, one in Greenwood Cemetery or at a matinee—and she is happy with either—two nights at the theatre, and one to take a semi-rest, dressed in her very best, in inspecting the other guests who throng the large parlors of the hotel after a late dinner. And how she does enjoy herself!

Superstition's Victim.

A colored man of Camden, N. J., being out of employment, consulted a black sorceress who had agreed to obtain for him, for a trifling $2, a place in a warehouse. She gave him a white powder and instructed him to scatter some of the same upon the floor of the warehouse, when he made application for a job, and to repeat these words: "As the dead remain, so let them be, in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost." When the poor fellow sprinkled the powder, as he had been directed, one of the warehousemen roughly asked him why he was soiling the floor? The question so startled him that he jerked out: "Kuffin, I want a job. Let de dead stay where dey be in de name of de Fadder, Son, an' Holy Ghos'!" The charm was broken and no employment was obtained. He again sought the negro witch. She told him again, for $2, that he must walk, without food or drink, from Market street ferry, Philadelphia, to 65th street and back, and he would be made the president of a great railroad. The deluded wretch did as he was told. He walked a mile further. With blistered heels and cavernous stomach he returned to Camden, and under close questioning from his oracle confessed that he had walked the additional mile. Again was the charm broken. To do penance for a disobedience of instructions he again set out upon a longer tramp than the one to 65th street, and for additional safety he carried around his neck a toad's heart hanging by a string. This time he ate two cents' worth of bread. Again was the spell broken. "The spirits of the air, the sea and the planets say that you have deceived them and you are undone," cried the wizard when she heard the third confession. "Den gimme back dat yar money—gimme cash," cried the colored man. "I's sore in de feet and sore in de back and I ain't president yet." He hied himself to a justice and caused the sibyl's arrest, and she was fined for obtaining money by fraud committed in professing to work charms by occult and crafty science. The credulous Senegambian had a lingering hope that he would have a partial success at least in his endeavors, and continued to practice one other charm. He swallowed three grains of sand regularly every three hours, saying, as he did so: "As the dead remain, I shall live and prosper. Amen." At the last accounts he was still swallowing sand.

Burdette's Ideal Mule.

No wonder the mule is a kicker. Were I a mule, love, I too, would kick. Every time I got a chance I would lift somebody higher than a kite. I know just exactly what kind of a mule I would be. A bay mule. One of these sad-eyed old fellows that lean back in the breaching and think. With striped legs like a zebra, and a dark brown streak down my back, and a paint brush tail. And my mane cut short, and my forstop banged, and a head as long as a flour barrel, and I'd be worth two hundred and a half in any market, and I'd wear flat harness and no blinders, and some day when some man hitched me up to a dray, and piled on a ton and a half of pig iron, a cord of wood, six barrels of flour, a good load of household goods, and a steamboat boiler, I would start off with it patiently and haul it steadily until I got to the top of the grade on the new road around North Hill, and right about there and then a falling maple leaf, fluttering down in a spark of gold and crimson, would scare me all but to death, and the authorities would have to drag the Mississippi River six weeks to find all of that smile of above the driver, while in three minutes after the emeute I would be tranquilly browsing on the grassy heights that smile above the silver flowing river. That is the kind of a mule I would be.

Two Promising Young Americans.

Augusta Journal.

Two natives of Maine are just now creating quite a sensation in Europe. They are Lillian Norton, who was born in Farmington, and Frederick L. Gower, a native of Sedgwick. Miss Norton is twenty-four years old, and is the favorite soprano of Paris. Her parents removed to Boston when she was seven years old. At the age of seventeen she began her musical culture in the Boston Conservatory, where she remained three years. She then went to Milan. After her Italian course she was engaged by the Grand Opera House at St. Petersburg for $1,000 for the season. The next year her salary was doubled. She created a furore in St. Petersburg and in Moscow. She dined with the Czar and the imperial family. At Paris she is under a three years' engagement at $12,000 per year, has luxurious apartments, a carriage and liveried driver, etc. Her mother is with her, and has invited her father, Parson Allen, to come over and make them a visit.

The engagement of Miss Norton to the Mr. Gower above mentioned is announced. Gower has had remarkable fortune. He is thirty years of age, and is worth $1,500,000. He made his money in the formation of telephone companies in Europe. He recently sold his English interests for $500,000. He is now a large owner in French companies. His father died when he was two years old. He and his brother were educated by Mr. A. H. Abbott, of Farmington. Since his good fortune Gower has made a handsome return to Mr. Abbott. He visited this country last year, and purchased a $25,000 house for his mother in Brookline, Mass. He put a $1,000 engagement ring on Miss Norton's finger. They will soon be married.

Dean Swift And The Tailor.

It is said that on one occasion a certain tailor, who thought he had a call to preach the everlasting gospel, called upon Dean Swift for approbation and instructions how to proceed. The dean received him politely, and, having invited him to a seat, began to examine him as to his qualifications for so important and sacred a calling. "You are a tailor, are you?" asked the dean. "Yes, sir." "And you desire to preach the gospel?" "Yes, sir; I think I am called to preach the gospel." "And you are well acquainted with the Scriptures, of course?" "I think I am." "Well, then, let me test your qualifications a little. We read in the Revelation of St. John that an angel stood one foot on land and another on sea. Now, can you tell me how many yards of cloth it would take to make that angel a pair of breeches?" "No," said the astonished tailor, "I do not think I can." "Well, then," said the imperturable dean, "go home and study out the problem, then come back to me, and I will tell you whether you are fit to preach the gospel or not."

THE ORIGINAL DOWN IN DIXIE.

BY DANIEL D. EMMETT.

I wisht was in the land of cotton,
Old times dey am not forgotten;
In Dixie land whar I was bawn in
Arly on a frosty mornin.

Ole missis marry 'Will de weaber;'
will he was a gay deceaber;
When he put his arms around her
He looked as fierce as a forty pounder.

His face was sharp as a butcher's cleaber,
But dat didn't seem a bit to greab 'er;
Will run away, missus took a decline,
Her face was de color ob de bacon rine,

While missis lib she libed in clober,
When she died she died all ober;
How could she act de foolish part,
An' marry a man to broke her heart?

Buckwheat cakes and cawn-meal batter
Make you fat, or little fatter;
Here's a health to the nex' ole missis,
An' all the gals as want to kiss us.

Now if you want to dribe away sorrow,
Come and hear dis song to-morrow;
Den hoe it down and scratch de grabble,
To Dixie's land I'm bound to trabble.

CHORUS

I wish I was in Dixie, hooray, hooray!
In Dixie land
We take our stand
To live an' die in Dixie;
Away, away, away down souf in Dixie!
Away, away, away down souf in Dixie!

A SINGULAR BATTLE.

Four Indian Girls Whip a Warrior.

Poplar River (M. T.) Cor. N. Y. Sun.

Recently there was witnessed near here one of the most singular scenes in Indian life—the punishment by four Indian girls of a young Indian who had assaulted one of their number. The following description is that of an eye-witness:

* * * * * * *

Now the lines are broken and the tribe forms a huge ring, into which the savage who provoked the animosity of the Pole-cat family is summarily thrust. He looks sullen and dogged. He has a hard fight before him, and he knows it, but he is a man who has the use of his hands, and he means to wear those girls out if it lies in muscle and prompt and effectual work. He may strike them anywhere above the breast and kill them if a blow in the neck will do it, but bullets and arrows are ready for him if he strikes foul. The girls, on the other hand, must take off his apron. If they accomplish that, he is disgraced to the uttermost moment of his life, driven from his tribe, left to starve on the prairie, and all Indians cautioned against harboring, feeding, or associating with him. The injured woman is allowed to have such squaws as she may select to assist her. But if she chooses too many to effect her purpose it is a disgrace to her, and so she is careful to select only enough to make the battle nearly equal.

The Pole-cat girls are the belles of the Yanktonais tribe. If a squaw can be pretty, these girls are beautiful, and by virtue of their attractions and their father's possessions in horses and other satisfactory property they are the aristocrats of the camp. Perhaps for that reason they ask no help in their present undertaking; and, for that reason also, perhaps, their savage sisters giggle and exchange whispers as the four girls step into the ring and approach the waiting buck. All five are in full war paint. Down the hunter's cheeks and along his neck are alternate sepia and green and yellow stripes on a background of brilliant red, while his chest, sides and back are tricked out with rude pictures of guns, bows and horses. The girls have smeared their faces with a coating of red, over which lies another of green striped with yellow. Their hair is unfastened at the back, and the front locks are braided with otter fur. Each wears a skirt and leggings, but their blankets are laid aside and their muscular brown arms are displayed.

There are no preliminaries. The girls dash at their enemy and attempt to grasp him. If all hands manage to get hold of him half the battle is accomplished. But he meets them squarely and fairly, planting a cruel blow between the eyes of the girl he had injured, knowing that if she is finished he can compel her to call off the rest. She is the general of the attacking forces and the prime object of his attack. Over she goes like a pinwheel, but she is up again, her face streaming with blood and her eyes swelling. The elder girl has contrived to secure a waist hold and locked her hands behind his back. His fists fall upon her upturned face with frightful force, but she keeps her hold. The other two girls are pressing him hard from behind, but his elbows work like battering rams, and one steps back with her hand pressed tightly to her breast, and a look of agony in her eyes. Now he whirls suddenly, planting ponderous blows upon the face and head of the girl who, on her knees, still clings to his waist with a dead grip. He fairly raises her from the ground as he spins, but her hold never relaxes.

His earliest victim again dashes at him and is rewarded by a crashing stroke on the mouth. She reels, but recovers and darts again to receive his fist on her neck with a force that whirls her half a dozen paces off and drops her like a log. Not a word is spoken. The thug of his fist, and the heavy breathing of the struggling contestants are the only sounds. The last rally of the prostrate girl has enabled the rear attack to reach the buck, and one has thrown her arms around his neck, while the other hangs to his right wrist. His left hand is still free, and it fairly twinkles in the air as he batters the woman at his wrist. Her grasp is like iron, but her head reels and sways as his heavy hand falls on it with a noise that reaches the farthest side of the irregular ring. Her eyes are closed and her breath comes convulsively. Were the fourth girl there to grasp that arm, the fight would soon end.

The girl behind is choking him, and he employs new tactics. Grasping the kneeling girl by the throat, he pounds the face of the one behind him with the back of his head. No vanity prompts her to let go. She tightens her grip and buries her face in the back of his neck. The fourth girl is up, staggering and dazed. Brushing the blood from her eyes with an angry motion, she approaches him, crouching as she moves. If the blow he has in store for her reaches the mark he will have another chance, for the girl at his waist is growing faint, and he can easily dispose of the other two. She comes at him like a cougar. The blow is delivered full upon her breast, but she grasps his wrist and writhes up his arm.

Now he is beset with danger. The two on his arms and the one at his waist pull him forward, the girl behind still strangling him, throws her weight on his back. In vain he attempts to straighten. The kneeling girl bends in her despairing struggle until hair hangs on the ground. The other three show the muscles rigid in their arms as they press him down upon their kneeling sister. Suddenly he springs backward with a marvelous effort of strength. The fainting girl at his waist finds her hands torn apart. But that triumph was his defeat. With a crash he comes to the ground, three girls upon him. One plants herself on his face and the other two kneel on his arms. There is a struggle, and then the youngest rises with a wild yell, waving the apron in her hand. Her yell is echoed by a low moan as the mother of the prostrate hunter staggers out of the circle, and by a grunt of satisfaction as Pole-cat recognizes the victory of his girls.

To-morrow, somewhere up the river that disgraced buck will be found with a bullet in his brain.

Land Law in China.

Shanghai Letter.

The land laws are by no means unfavorable to the distribution of wealth. Indeed, theorists who are fond of advocating the land for the people in the form of peasant proprietorship might take a leaf from the Chinese statute-book on this head. The general rule is that there can be no proprietorship in waste lands. All lands not under tillage belong to the Crown, but can be converted into private property by the simple expedient of bringing it under cultivation and undertaking to pay the taxes. The cultivator thereupon receives a Government title free of cost which is good against all the world. Land thus acquired can be freely sold on the open market. Primogeniture is, of course, unknown, and not only that, but a man can not by will dispose of his land in favor of any one person. It must be distributed evenly among all his male children without exception. The consequence is that land is held as a rule in extremely small parcels. A man with 1,000 acres is considered a millionaire, one with one 100 is deemed weathy, and even one with ten acres is considered well to do. But the greater part of the land is owned in small properties of five acres and under—even down to the sixth of an acre. It is, in fact, divided and subdivded till it can be divided no more. Even in cases where estates of 100 acres and upward are found, they are rarely if ever owned by a single individual, but nearly always by a family; that is to say, sons, on the death of their father, have refrained from dividing for possibly several generations, so that it may be twenty or more adults, each with his own wife and dependents, are owners each of an undivided share in the whole. The possession of a plot of land, however small, implies at least something in the way of capital, but below these again there is another class of cultivators who, as tenants, farm the land of those who from circumstances or disposition do not care to do so themselves. It is not easy to say what porportion this last class bears to the other, but it is very large. It may be safe to say that six or seven-tenths of the land is cultivated in this way. The system adopted is almost invariably the metayer, or half-profit system, the landlord providing the houses and paying the government taxes, which last amount to a tenth or so of the net profits, though they vary very much in different provinces. These cultivators are invariably men of no capital, their whole stock in trade consisting of few rude and simple instruments costing a mere trifle. It is on this class that the pinch of poverty first falls in bad years. The holdings are in size just sufficient to afford a bare sustenance in good years. Whatever is grown is consumed locally (there is no export market for surplus produce, and no possibility of converting it into money to be laid by for a rainy day.) When the crops fail, these peasants are literally beggars; they have nothing to pawn or pledge. They have no credit, and even if they had, there is nobody to lend. The landlords are not in a position to give any assistence, and if the bad season continues, these latter are in quite as miserable a plight as their tenants, for at such times even land depreciates in value so much as to be hardly worth selling, and large tracts are not unfrequently deserted altogether and left waste.

Advantages of the Corset

New York Tribune.

Dr. Chadwick believes a woman is in better health when wearing a proper-fitting corset, and less liable to suffer from consumption, dyspepsia or spinal curvature, but he deprecates the beginning of tight-lacing suddenly. "What I consider to be perfection in the application of the corset to the female figure or to the male," he says, "is to begin early in life, say at the age of seven or ten years, and then only with very yielding materials, permitting the corset simply to touch the contour of the body, though a little firmer at the waist. As the girl grows up and the chest expands, the bust of the corset may be properly made larger, the waist at the same time being kept within bounds. If such a system be carried out, there never would be any undue pressure anywhere, and the girl who reaches womanhood will possess the perfection of a figure with its round and taper waist, broad shoulders and well-developed chest. It always and will be necessary to restrain limit and correct the growing figure. Without aid nature seldom forms a good waist. Gradual and early correction, instead of violent and sudden reduction of deformity, is the way to achieve success—no evil effects can possibly ensue. In wearing of the corset, the degree of comfort with which it is borne should be the test of utility. Early care and judicious managment will in every case succeed in attaining elegance and in preserving health."

LOST AND FOUND.

A Strange Story of a Young Woman Who Has Fallen Heir to an Immense Estate.

Indianapolis Sentinel, Nov. 7.

Yesterday a Sentinel reporter was informed of a story which for romance, pathos and tragedy is rarely, if ever, excelled. Upon hearing of the story the writer immediately hunted up the facts, and was told the following story upon condition that no names be published:

At the breaking out of the War o' the Rebellion there lived a wealthy planter near Sheveport, La. He had two sons whom he had educated in an Eastern College. The oldest son was married and had two children when the call to arms rang throughout the Nation in 1861. Without a moment's hesitation the two young men enlisted with the Confederate cause, in the firm belief that they were doing right. Their father was opposed to their going to the army, but at last consented. From that time on the story of the various members of that household was very similar to the hundred stories which have been so often told in print. The youngest son died in the hospital, having contracted disease at the outset. The elder won his way up to the position of Colonel of a regiment. He was afterward a member of the staff of some General whose name can not now be recalled. After service in the army of nearly two years, he was killed by the explosion of a shell thrown into the camp. He was taken home for burial by his broken-hearted father. His wife died soon after with a broken heart. Her death was followed in a few days, by that of her oldest child. The youngest, now a sweet little girl of two years, was taken charge of by its grandfather, who cherished the most intense hatred toward the Government.

Next came the celebrated retreat known in history as "the Red River retreat." What scenes of horror followed such events only the soldier who was there and the inhabitants along the line can tell. Thousands of poor starving men and women came into the camps begging for victuals who had never before known want. It was a battle for life, such as always has and always must follow in the wake of a conquering army. Finally, to make a long story short, a stray bullet struck the poor old grandfather. Liberation of the slaves followed, and the wealthy estate was ruined. With no one to work the property it soon became a desolate waste.

The little girl was taken care of for a time by a poor family in the neighborhood, but afterward was transferred to the city of New Orleans, where she was kindly cared for by some distant relative. She received a moderate education, and enjoyed a comparatively easy life. She finally fell into the hands of the scoundrel of the story. Being but a school girl, she was easily influenced. Her disgrace followed, after which she found herself without a protector or a friend, for her own relatives turned against her, and ordered her to leave, saying her disgrace would not be borne by them. In despair she wandered away. Her beautiful face attracted attention and she found she could make her way by teaching. However, teaching in common schools is not very romantic, and she soon sought a home in a Northern city. How she lived there is not known, as she never will tell it. Suffice it that she found herself beset on every hand with temptations to forsake again the paths of virtue and recitude, and she finally found her way to this city.

The beautiful old Southern plantation became almost a wilderness. No one had lived at the old homestead for years. The former slaves had nearly all disappeared, and the balance created many a ghastly story out of their fruitful imaginations concerning the place. Taking advantage of this state of affairs, the place became the rendezvous of a band of thieves. Finally, after recovery from the shock of disasters following the War, the tide of prosperity once more set in, and it was not long until the old place was taken in charge by speculators, who agreed to manage the plantation and pay a reasonable sum into Court for the benefit of the heirs. Search was begun for the erring young woman, but it seemed to be too late. Stories were circulated, which nearly all believed, to the effect that she had committed suicide by throwing herself into the river from the deck of a steamboat. Her New Orleans relatives laid claim to the estate, and finally succeeded in securing it. The plantation was sold for a good price and the proceeds invested in New Orleans property.

For three or four days past a young man has been in the city, having traced the lost heir to this point. Sunday he discovered her whereabouts by an accident. He called to see her. She was not in distress; neither was she one of the lowest types of humanity that live in the city. She is the mother of a beautiful little child, and lives with a family who have known her ever since her advent in this place. She refused to tell where she came from, but after pressing the subject the Southern gentleman learned her name, where she was from, and, in fact, obtained every link necessary to establish a chain of evidence that put her into the possession of some of the finest property in the city of New Orleans. The story of her good fortune, however, did not move her, except that it caused her to weep quietly for a time. Then she asked for a day or two to think the matter over. Yesterday she asked to be allowed to remain unknown, and have the estate cared for by a trustee appointed by Court, and agreed, after her child was old enough, to have it educated, but for the present she wants to keep it with her. She was urged to return to her native State, but this she steadily refused to do, saying she could not bear to go back again to the scene of her early disgrace. The answer as to the value of the estate was given, after short calculation, as being between $450,000 and $480,000. The final conclusion was to do as desired by the young woman, and the entire estate will be held for the benefit of her child

Female Gymnasts.

New York Letter to Washington Post.

The rage for physical development among young women is increasing. Classes are forming in gymnasiums where young ladies and girls are taught, and also small clubs which receive instruction in private houses. One of the latest phases of this mania is an insatiable desire on the part of many young ladies to learn fencing. It has become a fashionable accomplishment in Europe, which is quite enough to make girls here ambitious to acquire it. Last year there were only a few classes, and they were small. This year there will be scores of young women poking swords at each other. One of the best-known gymnasiums in the city is within a stone's throw of the Windsor Hotel. The young ladies who go there for instruction and practice have little retiring rooms similar to bath houses. When they emerge they have a costume consisting of basque or jacket and trousers. The agility, grace and skill they show at the various exercises is astonishing. They are quicker to learn than boys, I am told, and much more graceful at everything they undertake. At first they are made to make certain movements with their fingers, hands and arms. Then they are taught to swing dumb-bells and clubs, keeping time to music. As the average young lady does not straighten out her arms properly when in the first stage of her training, the wooden dumb-bells have little brass balls on them that jingle when the movements are made with proper force. One of the exercises they are put through is that of marching with sticks for guns. They like this very much, and carry their heads with a jaunty air. What young chap would not pay a good fee at the door to see them going through evolutions? But the Professor rigorously excludes spectators. The advanced classes are required to practice on the horizontal bar. Beginners at this exercise have great difficulty in swinging their feet over, but some of the persevering ones go through a great variety of movements with the grace of an acrobat. Swinging in rings suspended on long ropes is a favorite exercise. In one corner of the room there are several poles in an upright position and others inclined at an angle. It is almost incredible, but nevertheless a fact, that young women will spend hours climbing those poles. The most popular exercise is that of mounting and vaulting over a wooden horse. They make a rush at this and spring into a wooden saddle, and, after much practice, they go over almost without touching. The private classes usually meet in a garret so many times a week for lessons and practice. When a young lady who has the physical development craze is detained at home by a rainy day she goes up to the garret and develops her muscle.

The cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World.

An EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC for all diseases of the Liver Stomach and Spleen.

Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. Simmons' Liver Regulator is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS

Ladies and all sufferers from neuralgia, hysteria, and kindred complaints, will find it without an equal.

Sarsaparilla

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron, all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and life-sustaining elements. It is the purest, safest, and most effectual alterative available to the public. The sciences of medicine and chemistry have never produced a remedy so potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Face-grubs, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ring-worm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood and cause derangement and decay. It stimulates the vital functions, restores and preserves health, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease of the blood need despair who will give AYER'S SARSAPARILLA a fair trial.

It is folly to experiment with the numerous low-priced mixtures, without medicinal virtues, offered as blood-purifiers, while disease becomes more firmly seated. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA is a medicine of such concentrated curative power, that it is by far the best, cheapest, and most reliable blood-purifier known. Physicians know its composition, and prescribe it. It has been widely used for forty years, and has won the unqualified confidence of millions whom it has benefited.

Spoopendyke Wanted His Waterproof.

"My dear," said Mr. Spoopendyke, pulling the shams off the bed, "where is my—my, where is my—you know what I mean. What did you do with it?"

"Your shawl strap?" asked Mrs. Spoopendyke, dropping the baby into the crib." Oh, I know; your dumb-bells. Is that what you want?"

"Has that shawl strap got sleeves in it?" demanded Mr. Spoopendyke, ransacking the sewing machine. "Are those dumb-bells split up the back and torn around the collar? You know what I want, my rubber overcoat. Where did you put it?" And Mr. Spoopendyke pulled a pile of letters out of the pigeon-hole to his wife's desk and spilled them along the floor.

"Where did you have it last?" murmured Mrs. Spoopendyke, with her finger in her mouth and consternation in her eye.

"Had it on!" growled Spoopendyke. Where'd ye s'pose I had it? Don't you know where the measly thing's gone to! Spry around now and find it! Take your finger out of your mouth; I don't suppose it's in there! Get that coat before it clears up, will ye?" and Mr. Spoopendyke shook the clock and then peered into the mantel vases.

"I don't believe it's going to rain much anyway," faltered Mrs. Spoopendyke, who couldn't remember of having seen the coat for a month. "When it looks like this its always going to sunshine," and she followed him around the room in a flutter of apprehension.

"Of course it is!" snorted Mr. Spoopendyke. "Things are going to do just what you tell 'em to do. If you had a lot of tin figures in front and a streak of mercury up your spine, you'd only need a sheet-iron case and a wire handle to be a barometer! If you'll look along your measly information about the weather, p'rhaps you'll find that overcoat at the other end of it! Where is that coat? Going to let me stand here and soak while the moths picnic that coat into a shad net? Take me by the elbow and lead me to the coat!" and Mr. Spoopendyke tipped the sofa over so that he could see under it, and then slapped a plaster bust of Minerva against the wall, under the impression that the coat might have crawled into her ear.

"It's the strangest thing in the world," giggled Mrs. Spoopendyke, hysterically. Are you sure you wore it home?"

"If I didn't, how'd it get home?" roared Mr. Spoopendyke, putting his hands on his knees and grinning in his wife's face. "S'pose it hired a hack and drove home? Oh, no! I didn't wear it home. The last I saw of it it had its hat over its ears and a female waterproof on its arm, piking up Fulton street as happy as the Alderman's funeral. What're ye standing there for? Got some indistinct notion that the dod-gasted coat had gone to get shaved, haven't ye? Who'd ye give it to? Been endowing a metaphysical chair to some kind of an old woman's home with it, haven't ye? Where's the coat? Develop the coat before I vitiate the insurance!" and Mr. Spoopendyke kicked his wife's work-basket across the room and rammed his arm to the shoulder up the chimney

"Do you remember where you wore it last?" asked Mrs. Spoopendyke, suddenly becoming calm and analytical.

"I wore it on my back!" protested Mr. Spoopendyke, who didn't remember whether he had taken it to church or to a hospital. "Maybe you're under the impression that I tied it to a stick and wheeled it along on the buttons! On my back, I tell ye! On this particular back!" and Mr. Spoopendyke almost broke his arm pointing out the attraction referred to. "Most folks fit up their rubber overcoats with a bent wire and a focus and wear 'em for spectacles, but I hadn't time; so I wore it on my back! Bring forth the coat!" yelled Mr. Spoopendyke, spinning around like a top. "Fetch the measly coat before the proprietor of these premises makes up his mind whether he will build a house here or mortgage the lot!"

"You wore it the last day it rained, and when it cleared off in the afternoon I noticed that you had on your spring overcoat," said Mrs. Spoopendyke, quietly.

"Great head!" granted Mr. Spoopendyke, beginning to feel uncomfortable, and wondering how it was coming out. "With your preceptive faculties and meteorological education, you only need one more leg and a clear night to be a dod-gasted street telescope at ten cents a peep! What of it? S'pose I did wear a spring overcoat! It's spring, ain't it?"

"And I don't know," continued Mrs. Spoopendyke, "but I think you had it on over your waterproof. If you will look, you may find the rubber coat inside of the other now."

Mr. Spoopendyke growled and snorted his way to the closet, like a fog-horn, and found—things as his wife had predicted.

GENTLEMEN: It gives me pleasure to state that I have been selling your buggies and carriages for four years, and can safely recommend them to any one in want of a buggy or carriage. Yours Truly, J. L. GRIBBLE.
Macomb, Illinois,

GENTLEMEN: With over fifteen years experience in building buggies, wagons, &c., I do not hesitate in saying your buggies and carriages are strictly first-class in workmanship, material and proportions, filling a long-felt want for a reliable article that can be sold at a price lower than any ordinary manufacturer can produce and sell the same quality of Work at. Yours, etc. I. S. KRICK, Conneautville Pa.

GENTLEMEN: I have used your Brewster side bar buggies for four years, together with buggies that cost me $300 and $350, and your buggies were the first that went out, on account of being side-bar. They have not cost me $5 for repairs, and those I have sold of your make have given good satisfaction. I think that you make the cheapest and best road wagons that are made in the United States for the money
Respectfully, F. H. HAMLIN, Lawrence Kansas.

DEAR SIRS: We have been using your buggies for the last four or five years. They have given entire satisfaction. I think they are the best buggies made for the money.
W. B. GRIMES & CO., Liverymen Whitehall Illinois.

GENTLEMEN: We have been handling your work for two seasons, and have in every instance found your buggies first class. We never have had one of your jobs returned to us for repairs; neither have we had a single complaint on account of work not being perfectly satisfactory. Very Respectfully, H. P. BUCKLEY & CO., Springfield, Illinois.

GENTLEMEN. I have no hesitancy in saying that the buggies manufactured by the Columbus Buggy Company are the best work for the price I have any knowledge of. In not a single instance has there been any dissatisfaction on the part of any one of my customers.
FRANK L. HALL.
Owensboro, Ky.

DEAR SIRS: For the past two years we have used your buggies side by side with other makes in both our stables, and are perfectly satisfied with the strength, durability and workmanship compared with others. As fast as our stock in livery is used up we shall replace them with your manufacture, knowing from experience that it is the best we can do. Respectfully,

THE AUBURN COURIER.

Volume 12. AUBURN, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, NOVEMBER 30, 1882. Number 48.

Auburn Courier.

JAMES A. BARNS, Publisher.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

Southern Letter.

HOT SPRINGS, ARK., Nov. 22, 1882.

ED. COURIER:—I want to congratulate the gallant democracy of old DeKalb for the glorious victory they won in the late election. It was a famous victory, and it gave me as much pleasure to learn of it as it did you to win it. I am glad to see the old party reunite on a firm basis, and work harmoniously together. DeKalb is democratic when the vote is polled, and I want to see her roll up a majority of 800 in the next race. We are going to win in the presidential contest if all will work as they did at the late election. I was particularly glad to see Mr. Moody win the laurels he so dearly deserved. I regard his race as the strongest, best conducted campaign of all the local contests in the state. He had certain ones to contend with, who should have been his friends; but he stands forth with a handsome majority, as the complete vindication of his course. I happen to know of Mr. Moody's career while representative before, and I know a more honest, energetic, faithful servant cannot be found. He is a man of great earnestness and perseverance, and will always be found at the post of duty. Now, I have a suggestion to make—an idea that has come to me with great force, and I hope the north part of the state will second the motion—and that is, that Mr. Moody ought to be speaker of the next house of representatives, which I believe is democratic. The north part of the state has not been represented in that position for a long time. Mr. Moody's race—almost a phenomenal one—will justly win the support of every one, and his urbane manners, pleasant address, and former experience should place him away ahead in the race. Affluent, ready speaker, a scholarly student—with a magnificent private character—there is not a democrat in the state but who would cordially support him. His great [illegible] and unswerving fidelity to the grand old party, whether in the smoke of defeat or in the hour of triumph, fit him especially for this place, and I would like to see the whole north part of the state take it up and pass it along until, gathering force, as it surely will, it will place him in the speaker's chair. It depends upon the firmness of members-elect in that part of the state as to whether they shall have their own. Let an organized effort be made among his friends everywhere, and especially in the adjoining counties, and it will form the nucleus to an irresistible tide that shall roll to victory. His friends at home can do him much good by their individual efforts. I wish I could add my humble efforts in person, for I am satisfied that with his claims and qualifications he could easily be elected.

We are having delightful weather here, having already had one or two slight frosts. A greater part of the foliage is still green, upon the trees. One of the grandest opera houses I ever saw was opened here last night, over a thousand persons being present. One year ago we had but one brick house in the city, and now we have fourteen handsome brick blocks, and more going up. I still regard this as a good point for a farmer. Corn $1. oats 75 cents, potatoes $1,50, hay $25 per ton. Market always good. I was out hunting five days and shot my first deer, 120 pounds. Any amount of bear, deer, turkeys, ducks, quail, &c.

T. C. MAYS.

A company has been formed for growing and exporting coffee in Colima, Mexico, one of the richest coffee districts in the world. Sixteen thousand acres have been purchased near Manzanillo, on which there are already sixty thousand trees in bearing and six hundred thousand coffee-plants from one to three years old. As the plants produce each two pounds annually, at a low estimate, the enterprise is certainly promising. The State legislature of Colima, with a view to encouraging this industry, has exempted from duty all machinery, implements, etc., used in the enterprise. It has, moreover, offered a large premium to the person raising the first fifteen thousand pounds of best quality of coffee.

Eighty-Five Dollars Lost.

"You do not tell me that your husband is up and entirely cured by so simple a medicine as Parker's Ginger Tonic?" "Yes, indeed, I do," said Mrs. Benjamin to her neighbor, and after we had lost eighty-five dollars in doctor bills and prescriptions. Now my husband feels as well as ever. 44-4w

Edwin Forrest.

THE GREAT TRAGEDIAN AS A CIRCUS PERFORMER.

"One of my first adventures," said Edwin Forrest, "in the dramatic line, shortly after my debut as Young Norval, was with a company which played a brief and fitful engagement in Kentucky. The company came to grief at Lexington, and I cast about to see what I could do. I could not afford to be idle long, and one day I fell in with two Frenchmen, Pepin and Bischard, who came along with a circus company. After a slight hesitation I joined them. I was not used to riding, but I could jump and tumble, so I went into the ring with the best performers they had. I was not meant for the circus, however, and I soon drifted back to the legitimate." In the following spring Forrest went to New York in a destitute condition, most of his clothes having been kept in Albany in part payment for his board. He was disgusted with his profession and had about made up his mind to quit the stage, when he was asked by an obscure actor to play for his benefit at the Park Theater. The man's tale of distress touched him and he consented. That was the turning point of his career. He chose Othello for the occasion, and the benefit was a sweeping success. On the day following, Gilford, the manager of the Bowery Theater, placed $500 in Forrest's hand and engaged him for one year. From that time forward his course was a series of success.

San Gabriel Mission, Southern California.

In the plain, just under the edge of mountains, lies the old village and mission church of San Gabriel. The mission dates from 1761. It was founded, like all the other missions of California, by friars sent out from the college of San Fernando, in the city of Mexico. I well recollect the ecclesiastical buildings of this college of San Fernando. They stand yet on the principal streets which was the scene of Cortes's disastrous retreat from the city, and he marked, I believe with an inscription commemorating the site of the famous Leap of Alvarado. The buildings founded from this picturesque source are thoroughly worthy of it. The same massiveness, the same taste of bright color, the same quaint rococo details, including the peculiar battlement, which was a kind of Spanish horn of dominion. At this one, six green old bronze bells hang in as many niches together. The fern-like shadows of a line of pepper-trees print themselves in the sunshine against the time-stained white wall. No more than the church now remains, the great agricultural establishments connected with these missions having been swept away years before the American occupation by edict of the Mexican government. Some bits of broken aqueduct, and a few orange-trees above a hundred years old, in what was once the mission garden, are the only vestiges of former prosperity. The interior of the church contains a few battered old religious paintings, always of the worst type of their kind. It is doubtful if the luxury of good pictures was ever superadded in these establishments to the excellent architecture, for which there seems to have been a natural instinct.

The village is piquantly foreign. Its single street is composed entirely of white adobe houses. One of them with a tumbling red-tiled roof, is so full of holes that it looks as if it had been shelled. All the signs are in Spanish. Here is the Zapatero, or shoemaker, and here the Panaderia, or bakery. The south walls are hung with a drapery of red peppers drying in the sun to prepare the favorite condiment. The population are a humble class, who gain their livelihood for the most part by day-labor on the surrounding estates. They are not too poor, however, to retain their taste for festivity still. On the occasion of some notable wedding among them they will manage to mount on horseback, and surrounding a bridal carriage driven postilion-fashion, return from the ceremony at the old mission whooping and firing pistols in the air in the most gallant and hilarious fashion.—William Henry Bishop, in Harper's Magazine for December.

Glass Shingles.

A patent has been taken out for the manufacture of shingles composed of glass. It is claimed for this material that it is so much more durable, stronger and more impervious to rain than slate or any other substance now used. The manufacture of the shingles will also be comparatively inexpensive, and can be placed in by an ordinary workman. These shingles have the advantage of slate in several particulars. In consequence of their shape they lie solid on the roof, and can be used on comparatively flat roofs, and they will admit of persons on them without danger or fracture, a quality which slate does not possess. They are interlocked so as to leave no interstices between them, and one rivet holds each pair of shingles, so that they cannot be forced from their places by the wind or atmospheric disturbances. They are also made so as to have very little waste material. It takes 300 slates, each 8x12 inches, to cover what is technically known as a "square roof" (a square measuring ten feet either way,) but 150 of these shingles will suffice for the same space. Glass is likewise a non-conductor of electricity, and houses with these roofs will need no lightning conductors. Although the kind of glass intended to be used in these shingles is non-transparent glass, a roof with colored border and opalescent body is said to be very handsome.

The savings and building feature of the Baltimore and Ohio employes relief association bid fair to rival in usefulness the benevolent features inaugurated two years ago—the growth and prosperity of which have been unprecedented in the history of railway relief organizations of this continent. The savings fund is rapidly accumulating what is already a large surplus, while considerable sums have been loaned, its members to acquire or redeem homes from onerous mortgages. Several houses are in course of erection, under the direct superintendence of the secretary of the association. Dr. W. F. Barnard, who is also active, securing options upon lands adjacent to the Baltimore and Ohio lines suitable for building purposes. Those having such lands in the market will do well to enter in correspondence with him. We learn that the association also offers its members the advantages of concessions obtained upon building materials and labor, and proposes organizing a construction or camp train in the spring, in order to erect other houses, for which orders have already been given, expeditiously and cheaply. These arrangements, when perfected, will enable members of the association to acquire homes of their own at net cost, upon long time and in cash small installments as not practically to exceed a fair rental of the properties they occupy.

Mrs. Mary E. Foster, widow of the late Senator Foster, of Allen county, is prominently mentioned as a candidate for state librarian, her many personal friends with those of her deceased husband throughout the state being determined to submit her name to the next session of the general assembly. Mrs Foster is a lady peculiarly fitted for the position, will reflect credit upon the office, and give the most unbounded satisfaction. She is the owner of the Senator's daily and weekly Journal, a staunch democratic paper, that has done yeoman service in the campaign just closed and materially assisted in rolling up the large majority for our state ticket in the banner democratic county of the state. We trust our party exchanges will take pleasure in honoring her and themselves by their earnest support of this most estimable lady.—Valpo. Messenger.

Among the large majorities received by candidates in the past may be mentioned that of 114,412 to 25,734 by which Kentucky elected a democratic governor in 1868; in 1872 Grant's majority in Pennsylvania of 136,118 over Greeley, a republican gain during one month of 102,000 votes, and the defeat of Clement L. Vallandigham in Ohio in 1863 by a majority of 101,099. Such majorities deserve to be mentioned in the same category with Cleveland's splendid majority in New York.—Ligonier Banner.

Where Does Coal Oil Come From?

This is one of the questions that has long agitated the scientific world, and upon the answer to it more depends than seems at first sight. If we knew its source, we can fairly determine as to the nature and extent of the supplies, and where to look for them.

The Scientific American has been discussing the subject. It has been thought that the oils have been produced by a slow distillation during the process of coal formation. A fatal objection, however, to this theory is found in the fact that Great Britain, which has immense coal-beds, contains nothing of the kind, though supposed traces have been found here and there.

The Silurian and Devonian rocks, which contain the sources of most of the oil wells now in existence, have great quantities of fossil remains, and this has suggested the theory that the oils have resulted from their decomposition.

Professor Mendelijeg thinks that, on the first formation of the earth, vast quantities of inorganic iron and carbon existed.

Price Reduced.

Anticipating the removal of the stamp act at no distant day, the Magnetic Medicine Co., of Detroit, as will be seen by their new advertisement that appears in to-day's paper, have reduced the price of their medicine from one dollar per package to fifty cents, and when twelve packages are ordered at one time, and five dollars paid for the same, they issue a written guarantee agreeing to refund the money if the full course of treatment fails to effect a cure. We have no doubt the Magnetic Medicine will have a large sale in every section of the country, as few medicines are sold at as low a price, and what is especially in its favor is the guarantee of its effecting a cure. The medicine is sold at all drug stores, everywhere. Guarantees are issued in Auburn, by J. C. Henry.

A $20.00 Biblical Reward.

The publishers of the Rutledge's Monthly offer twelve valuable rewards in their Monthly for December, among which is the following:

We will give $20.00 in gold to the person telling us how many verses there are in the new testement scriptures (not the new revision) by December 10th, 1882. Should two or more correct answers be received, the reward will be divided. The money will be forwarded to the winner December 15th, 1882. Persons trying for the reward must send 20 cents in silver (no postage stamps taken) with their answer, for which they will receive the Christmas Monthly, in which the name and address of the winner of the reward and the correct answer will be published. This may be worth $20.00 to you; cut it out. Address Rutledge Publishing Company, Easton, Penn.

Bushy Head's Message.

[Special by telegraph to the Times-Star]

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., November 17.—The national council of the Cherokee Nation, is now in session at Tallquah. The principal chief, Bushy Head, delivered his fourth annual message yesterday. It treats altogether on local matters, urges the Indians to practice industry and economy, announces the nation out of debt and the yearly receipts over sixty thousand dollars, and recommends the continuance of an Indian delegation at Washington to protect Indian interests.

Farmers!

If you want free sample copies of the largest and best agricultural paper in the country, write yours and your neighbors' names on a postal card and mail it to Farmer's Friend Pub. Co., South Bend, Ind. Price 50 cents a year and premiums to every subscriber.

VERY CROOKED.—The crookedest of crooked work, and yet that which has grace and elegance in every crook, may be seen in the Noyes Dictionary Holders and Noyes Handy Tables. In them the fact is clearly demonstrated that if the inventor has not made the the crooked straight, he has made the straight crooked, and thereby increased its beauty and utility. People in search of holiday presents will appreciate his success. A fine illustrated circular may be had free by addressing L. W. Noyes, 99 West Monroe St., Chicago. The prices have been greatly reduced.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS

enriches the blood and purifies the system; cures weakness, lack of energy, etc. Try a bottle.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS

is the only Iron preparation that does not color the teeth, and will not cause headache or constipation, as other Iron preparations will.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS

Ladies and all sufferers from neuralgia, hysteria, and kindred complaints, will find it without an equal.

Ayer's
Sarsaparilla

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron, all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and life-sustaining elements. It is the purest, safest, and most effectual alterative available to the public. The sciences of medicine and chemistry have never produced a remedy so potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Face-grubs, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ring-worm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood and cause derangement and decay. It stimulates the vital functions, restores and preserves health, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease of the blood need despair who will give AYER'S SARSAPARILLA a fair trial.

It is folly to experiment with the numerous low-priced mixtures, without medicinal virtues, offered as blood-purifiers, while disease becomes more firmly seated. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA is a medicine of such concentrated curative power, that it is by far the best, cheapest, and most reliable blood-purifier known. Physicians know its composition, and prescribe it. It has been widely used for forty years, and has won the unqualified confidence of millions whom it has benefited.

Spoopendyke Wanted His Waterproof.

"My dear," said Mr. Spoopendyke, pulling the shams off the bed, "where is my—my, where is my—you know what I mean. What did you do with it?"

"Your shawl strap?" asked Mrs. Spoopendyke, dropping the baby into the crib. "Oh, I know; your dumb-bells. Is that what you want?"

"Has that shawl strap got sleeves in it?" demanded Mr. Spoopendyke, ransacking the sewing machine. "Are those dumb-bells split up the back and torn around the collar? You know what I want, my rubber overcoat. Where did you put it?" And Mr. Spoopendyke pulled a pile of letters out of the pigeon-hole to his wife's desk and spilled them along the floor.

"Where did you have it last?" murmured Mrs. Spoopendyke, with her finger in her mouth and consternation in her eye.

"Had it on!" growled Spoopendyke. Where'd ye s'pose I had it? Don't you know where the measly thing's gone to! Spry around now and find it! Take your finger out of your mouth; I don't suppose it's in there! Get that coat before it clears up, will ye?" and Mr. Spoopendyke shook the clock and then peered into the mantel vases.

"I don't believe it's going to rain much anyway," faltered Mrs. Spoopendyke, who couldn't remember of having seen the coat for a month. "When it looks like this its always going to sunshine," and she followed him around the room in a flutter of apprehension.

"Of course it is!" snorted Mr. Spoopendyke. "Things are going to do just what you tell 'em to do. If you had a lot of tin figures in front and a streak of mercury up your spine, you'd only need a sheet-iron case and a wire handle to be a barometer! If you'll look along your measly information about the weather, p'rhaps you'll find that overcoat at the other end of it!. Where is that coat? Going to let me stand here and soak while the moths picnic that coat into a shad net? Take me by the elbow and lead me to the coat!" and Mr. Spoopendyke tipped the sofa over so that he could see under it, and then slapped a plaster bust of Minerva against the wall, under the impression that the coat might have crawled into her ear.

"It's the strangest thing in the world," giggled Mrs. Spoopendyke, hysterically. Are you sure you wore it home?"

"If I didn't, how'd it get home?" roared Mr. Spoopendyke, putting his hands on his knees and grinning in his wife's face. "S'pose it hired a hack and drove home? Oh, no! I didn't wear it home. The last I saw of it it had its hat over its ears and a female waterproof on its arm, piking up Fulton street as happy as the Alderman's funeral. What're ye standing there for? Got some indistinct notion that the dod-gasted coat had gone to get shaved, haven't ye? Who'd ye give it to? Been endowing a metaphysical chair to some kind of an old woman's home with it, haven't ye? Where's the coat? Develop the coat before I vitiate the insurance!" and Mr. Spoopendyke kicked his wife's work-basket across the room and rammed his arm to the shoulder up the chimney.

"Do you remember where you wore it last?" asked Mrs. Spoopendyke, suddenly becoming calm and analytical.

"I wore it on my back!" protested Mr. Spoopendyke, who didn't remember whether he had taken it to church or to a hospital. "Maybe you're under the impression that I tied it to a stick and wheeled it along on the buttons! On my back, I tell ye! On this particular back!" and Mr. Spoopendyke almost broke his arm pointing out the attraction referred to. "Most folks fit up their rubber overcoats with a bent wire and a focus and wear 'em for spectacles, but I hadn't time; so I wore it on my back! Bring forth the coat!" yelled Mr. Spoopendyke, spinning around like a top. "Fetch the measly coat before the proprietor of these premises makes up his mind whether he will build a house here or mortgage the lot!"

"You wore it the last day it rained, and when it cleared off in the afternoon I noticed that you had on your spring overcoat," said Mrs. Spoopendyke, quietly.

"Great head!" granted Mr. Spoopendyke, beginning to feel uncomfortable, and wondering how it was coming out. "With your preceptive faculties and meteorological education, you only need one more leg and a clear night to be a dod-gasted street telescope at ten cents a peep! What of it? S'pose I did wear a spring overcoat! It's spring, ain't it?"

"And I don't know," continued Mrs. Spoopendyke, "but I think you had it on over your waterproof. If you will look, you may find the rubber coat inside of the other now."

Mr. Spoopendyke growled and snorted his way to the closet, like a fog-horn, and found—things as his wife had predicted.

GENTLEMEN: It gives me pleasure to state that I have been selling your buggies and carriages for four years, and can safely recommend them to any one in want of a buggy or carriage. Yours Truly, J. L. GRIBBLE.

Macomb, Illinois,

GENTLEMEN: With over fifteen years experience in building buggies wagons, &c. I do not hesitate in saying your buggies and carriages are strictly first-class in workmanship, material and proportions, filling a long-felt want for a reliable article that can be sold at a price lower than any ordinary manufacturer can produce and sell the same quality of Work at. Yours, etc. I. S. KRICK, Connersville Pa.

GENTLEMEN: I have used your Brewster side bar buggies for four years, together with buggies that cost me $300 and $350, and your buggies were the first that went out, on account of being side-bar. They have not cost me $5 for repairs, and those I have sold of your make have given good satisfaction. I think that you make the cheapest and best road wagons that are made in the United States for the money

Respectfully, P. H. HAMLIN, Lawrence Kansas.

DEAR SIRS: We have been using your buggies for the last four or five years. They have given entire satisfaction. I think they are the best buggies made for the money.

THE AUBURN COURIER.

Volume 12. AUBURN, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, NOVEMBER 30, 1882. Number 48.

Auburn Courier.

JAMES A. BARNS, Publisher.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

Southern Letter.

HOT SPRINGS, ARK., Nov. 22, 1882.

ED. COURIER:—I want to congratulate the gallant democracy of old DeKalb for the glorious victory they won in the late election. It was a famous victory, and it gave me as much pleasure to learn of it as it did you to win it. I am glad to see the old party reunite on a firm basis, and work harmoniously together. DeKalb is democratic when the vote is polled, and I want to see her roll up a majority of 800 in the next race. We are going to win in the presidential contest if all will work as they did at the late election. I was particularly glad to see Mr. Moody win the laurels he so clearly deserved. I regard his race as the strongest, best conducted campaign of all the local contests in the state. He had enemies to contend with, who should have been his friends; but he stands forth with a handsome majority, as the complete vindication of his course. I happen to know of Mr. Moody's career while representative before, and I know a more honest, energetic, faithful servant can not be found. He is a man of great earnestness and perseverance, and will always be found at the post of duty. Now, I have a suggestion to make—an idea that has come to me with great force, and I hope the north part of the state will second the motion—and that is, that Mr. Moody ought to be speaker of the next house of representatives, which I believe is democratic. The north part of the state has not been represented in that position for a long time. Mr. Moody's race—almost a phenomenal one—will justly win the support of every one, and his urbane manners, pleasant address, and former experience should place him away ahead in the race. Affluent, ready speaker, a scholarly student—with a magnificent private character—there is not a democrat in the state but who could cordially support him. His great [illegible] and unswerving fidelity to the grand old party, whether in the smoke of defeat or in the hour of triumph, fit him especially for this place, and I would like to see the whole north part of the state take it up and pass it along until, gathering force, as it surely will, it will place him in the speaker's chair. It depends upon the firmness of members-elect in that part of the state as to whether they shall have their own. Let an organized effort be made among his friends everywhere, and especially in the adjoining counties, and it will form the nucleus to an irresistable tide that shall roll to victory. His friends at home can do him much good by their individual efforts. I wish I could add my humble efforts in person, for I am satisfied that with his claims and qualifications he could easily be elected.

We are having delightful weather here, having already had one or two slight frosts. A greater part of the foliage is still green, upon the trees. One of the grandest opera houses I ever saw was opened here last night, over a thousand persons being present. One year ago we had but one brick house in the city, and now we have fourteen handsome brick blocks, and more going up. I still regard this as a good point for a farmer. Corn $1, oats 75 cents, potatoes $1.50, hay $25 per ton. Market always good. I was out hunting five days and shot my first deer, 130 pounds. Any amount of bear, deer, turkeys, ducks, quail, &c.

T. C. MAYS.

A company has been formed for growing and exporting coffee in Colima, Mexico, one of the richest coffee districts in the world. Sixteen thousand acres have been purchased near Manzanillo, on which there are already sixty thousand trees in bearing and six hundred thousand coffee-plants from one to three years old. As the plants produce each two pounds annually, at a low estimate, the enterprise is certainly promising. The state legislature of Colima, with a view to encouraging this industry, has exempted from duty all machinery, implements, etc, used in the enterprise. It has, moreover, offered a large premium to the person raising the first fifteen thousand pounds of best quality of coffee.

Eighty-Five Dollars Lost.

"You do not tell me that your husband is up and entirely cured by so simple a medicine as Parker's Ginger Tonic?" "Yes, indeed, I do," said Mrs. Benjamin to her neighbor, and after we had lost eighty-five dollars in doctor bills and prescriptions. Now my husband feels as well as ever. 44-4w

Edwin Forrest.

THE GREAT TRAGEDIAN AS A CIRCUS PERFORMER.

"One of my first adventures," said Edwin Forrest, "in the dramatic line, shortly after my debut as Young Norval, was with a company which played a brief and fitful engagement in Kentucky. The company came to grief at Lexington, and I cast about to see what I could do. I could not afford to be idle long, and one day I fell in with two Frenchmen, Pepin and Bischard, who came along with a circus company. After a slight hesitation I joined them. I was not used to riding, but I could jump and tumble, so I went into the ring with the best performers they had. I was not meant for the circus, however, and I soon drifted back to the legitimate." In the following spring Forrest went to New York in a destitute condition, most of his clothes having been kept in Albany in part payment for his board. He was disgusted with his profession and had about made up his mind to quit the stage, when he was asked by an obscure actor to play for his benefit at the Park Theater. The man's tale of distress touched him and he consented. That was the turning point of his career. He chose Othello for the occasion, and the benefit was a sweeping success. On the day following, Gilford, the manager of the Bowery Theater, placed $500 in Forrest's hand and engaged him for one year. From that time forward his course was a series of success.

San Gabriel Mission, Southern California.

In the plain, just under the edge of mountains, lies the old village and mission church of San Gabriel. The mission dates from 1761. It was founded, like all the other missions of California, by friars sent out from the college of San Fernando, in the city of Mexico. I well recollect the ecclesiastical buildings of this college of San Fernando. They stand yet on the principal streets which was the scene of Cortez's disastrous retreat from the city, and he marked, I believe with an inscription commemorating the site of the famous Leap of Alvarado. The building founded from this picturesque source are thoroughly worthy of it. The same massiveness, the same taste of bright color, the same quaint rococo details, including the peculiar battlement, which was a kind of Spanish horn of dominion. At this one, six green old bronze bells hang in as many niches together. The fern-like shadows of a line of pepper-trees print themselves in the sunshine against the time-stained white wall. No more than the church now remains, the great agricultural establishments connected with these missions having been swept away years before the American occupation by edict of the Mexican government. Some bits of broken aqueduct, and a few orange-trees above a hundred years old, in what was once the mission garden, are the only vestiges of former prosperity. The interior of the church contains a few battered old religious paintings, always of the worst type of their kind. It is doubtful if the luxury of good pictures was ever superadded in these establishments to the excellent architecture, for which there seems to have been a natural instinct.

The village is piquantly foreign. Its single street is composed entirely of white adobe houses. One of them with a tumbling red-tiled roof, is so full of holes that it looks as if it had been shelled. All the signs are in Spanish. Here is the Zapatero, or shoemaker, and here the Panaderia, or bakery. The sunlit walls are hung with a drapery of red peppers drying in the sun to prepare the favorite condiment. The population are a humble class, who gain their livelihood for the most part by day-labor on the surrounding estates. They are not too poor, however, to retain their taste for festivity still. On the occasion of some notable wedding among them they will manage to mount on horseback, and surrounding a bridal carriage driven postilion-fashion, return from the ceremony at the old mission whooping and firing pistols in the air in the most gallant and hilarious fashion. William Henry Bishop, in Harper's Magazine for December.

Glass Shingles.

A patent has been taken out for the manufacture of shingles composed of glass. It is claimed for this material that it is so much more durable, stronger and and more impervious to rain than slate or any other substance now used. The manufacture of the shingles will also be comparatively inexpensive, and can be placed in by an ordinary workman. These shingles have the advantage of slate in several particulars. In consequence of their shape they lie solid on the roof, and can be used on comparatively flat roofs, and they will admit of persons on them without danger or fracture, a quality which slate does not possess. They are interlocked so as to leave no interstices between them, and one rivet holds each pair of shingles, so that they cannot be forced from their places by the wind or atmospheric disturbances. They are also made so as to have very little waste material. It takes 800 slates, each 8x12 inches, to cover what is technically known as a "square roof" (a square measuring ten feet either way,) but 150 of these shingles will suffice for the same space. Glass is likewise a non-conductor of electricity, and houses with these roofs will need no lightning conductors. Although the kind of glass intended to be used in these shingles is non-transparent glass, a roof with colored border and opalescent body is said to be very handsome.

The savings and building feature of the Baltimore and Ohio employes relief association bid fair to rival in usefulness the benevolent features inaugurated two years ago—the growth and prosperity of which have been unprecedented in the history of railway relief organizations of this continent. The savings fund is rapidly accumulating what is already a large surplus, while considerable sums have been loaned, its members to acquire or redeem homes from onerous mortgages. Several houses are in course of erection, under the direct superintendence of the secretary of the association. Dr. W. F. Barnard, who is also active, securing options upon lands adjacent to the Baltimore and Ohio lines suitable for building purposes. Those having such lands in the market will do well to enter in correspondence with him, We learn that the association also offers its members the advantages of concessions obtained upon building materials and labor, and proposes organizing a construction or camp train in the spring, in order to erect other houses, for which orders have already been given, expediously and cheaply. These arrangements, when perfected, will enable members of the association to acquire homes of their own at net cost, upon long time and in cash small installments as not practically to exceed a fair rental of the properties they occupy.

Mrs. Mary E. Foster, widow of the late Senator Foster, of Allen county, is prominently mentioned as a candidate for state librarian, her many personal friends with those of her deceased husband throughout the state being determined to submit her name to the next session of the general assembly. Mrs Foster is a lady peculiarly fitted for the position, will reflect credit upon the office, and give the most unbounded satisfaction. She is the owner of the Senator's daily and weekly Journal, a staunch democratic paper, that has done yeoman service in the campaign just closed and materially assisted in rolling up the large majority for our state ticket in the banner democratic county of the state. We trust our party exchanges will take pleasure in honoring her and themselves by their earnest support of this most estimable lady.—Valpo. Messenger.

Among the large majorities received by candidates in the past may be mentioned that of 114,412 to 25,734 by which Kentucky elected a democratic governor in 1868; in 1872 Grant's majority in Pennsylvania of 136,118 over Greeley, a republican gain during one month of 102,000 votes, and the defeat of Clement L. Vallandigham in Ohio in 1863 by a majority of 101,099. Such majorities deserve to be mentioned in the same category with Cleveland's splendid majority in New York.—Ligonier Banner.

Where Does Coal Oil Come From?

This is one of the questions that has long agitated the scientific world and upon the answer to it more depends than seems at first sight. If we know its source, we can fairly determine as to the nature and extent of the supplies, and where to look for them.

The Scientific American has been discussing the subject. Some have thought that the oils have been produced by a slow distillation during the process of coal formation. A fatal objection, however, to that theory is found in the fact that Great Britain, which has immense coal-beds, contains nothing of this kind, though supposed traces have been found here and there.

The Silurian and Devonian rocks, which contain the sources of most of the oil wells now in existence, have great quantities of fossil remains, and this has suggested the theory that the oils have resulted from their decomposition.

Professor Mendelijeg thinks that, on the first formation of the earth, vast quantities of inorganic iron and carbon existed.

Price Reduced.

Anticipating the removal of the stamp act at no distant day, the Magnetic Medicine Co., of Detroit, as will be seen by their new advertisement that appears in to-day's paper, have reduced the price of their medicine from one dollar per package to fifty cents, and when twelve packages are ordered at one time, and five dollars paid for the same, they issue a written guarantee agreeing to refund the money if the full course of treatment fails to effect a cure. We have no doubt the Magnetic Medicine will have a large sale in every section of the country, as few medicines are sold at as low a price, and what is especially in its favor is the guarantee of its effecting a cure. The medicine is sold at all drug stores, everywhere. Guarantees are issued in Auburn, by J. C. Henry.

A $20.00 Biblical Reward.

The publishers of the Rutledge's Monthly offer twelve valuable rewards in their Monthly for December, among which is the following:

We will give $20.00 in gold to the person telling us how many verses there are in the new testament scriptures (not the new revision) by December 10th, 1882. Should two or more correct answers be received, the reward will be divided. The money will be forwarded to the winner December 15th, 1882. Persons trying for the reward must send 20 cents in silver (no postage stamps taken) with their answer, for which they will receive the Christmas Monthly, in which the name and address of the winner of the reward and the correct answer will be published. This may be worth $20.00 to you; cut it out. Address Rutledge Publishing Company, Easton, Penn.

E. BROMLEY, Gen'l P. & T. Agt. [illegible]

TWO OF THEM.

On the farm house porch the farmer sat,
With his daughter having a cosy chat;
She was his only child, and he Thought her as fair as a girl could be.
A wee bit jealous the old man grew,
If he fancied any might come to woo;
His one pet lamb and her loving care
He wished with nobody else to share.

"There should be two of you, child," said he—
"There should be two to welcome me
When I come home from the field at night;
Two would make the old home bright.
There's neighbor Gray with his children [illegible]
To be glad together. Had I one more,
A proud old father I'd be, my dear,
With two good children to greet me here."

Down by the gate 'neath the old elm tree
Donald waited alone; and she
For whom he waited his love-call heard,
And on either cheek the blushes stirred.
"Father," she cried, and knelt her down,
And kissed the hand that was old and brown—
"Father, there may be two if you will,
And I—your only daughter still.

"Two to welcome you home at night—
Two to make the old home bright;
I—and somebody else." "I see,"
Said the farmer, "and whom may somebody be?"
Oh, the dimples in Bessie's cheek,
That played with the blushes at hide-and-seek!
Away from his gaze she turned her head,
"One of Neighbor Gray's children," she said.

"H'm," said the farmer, "make it plain!
Is it Susan, Alice, or Mary Jane?"
Another kiss on the aged hand,
To help the farmer to understand [illegible].
"H'm," said the farmer, "yes, I see—
It's two for yourself and one for me."
But Bessie said "There can be but one
For me and my heart till life is done."

A BARROOM INCIDENT.

"Opportunities for studying physiognomies, eh? Anylysis of character, eh?" observed a representative bartender on the Sixth avenue, in reply to queries. "You wait a little to high for me with such a uff; but this I do know, and can gamble on: For telling what a man's made of, what he wants, what's his money basis, how much of him's solid and how much of him's gas, and so on, a bartender can take the belt. Just twig those two gents crossing the street yonder and steering for the door of my ranch, and tell me how you'd size them up."

"A pair of rather promising customers," was the reply.

"Ay, but the particulars, I mean. I see in e'm a Bourbon straight and either a hot Scotch or a spiced Jamaica with stamps on the nail, and more to space."

At this moment the customers entered the saloon and designated decoctions near enough to the bartender's prediction to justify a sidelong glance in my direction as he served them and made change with customary expertness.

"Know 'em?" he continued, as we were once more left together. "Why, I know the minute I plant my eye on 'em! Good, bad and indifferent; treater or treat beggar; flush, half broke, lone dime in pocket or flat busted; noisy lush or silent booze; grum or frisky; sponge or spread; hanger on or shelter out—I know e'm all on sight. Either their faces or manners gives 'em away afore they've named their hi'st, or even touched the bar rail. Ah, Poppy, awake again? Hold on or I'll fix you."

The last remark was elicited by the coughing and wheezing awakening of a queer, shabby, little genteel old man, with watery eyes and peaked features. He had been snoozing in his seat behind the stove, on an upholstered bench that ran along the wall opposite the bar and near the side door or "Family Entrance" of the liquor saloon. The bartender hastily mixed a spirituous compound, carried it over to the queer little old man, and watched him somewhat sorrowfully as he silently but tremulously drank it off, and again tapped his forehead with good-humored significance, and returned to his duties without receiving an equivalent.

"Oh, if I was only an inkslinger like you fellers," he said, "what stories, an' articles, an' editorials, an' paragraphs, an' biography, and hull books I could write up about what I see in this gin-mill!" rubbing down the soiled counter with an energy indicative of a sudden discontent with his non-literary career. "It may be I've got the talent, too, only luck's dead agin me. However," with a brightening look and tossing the cloth under the counter, "that's no reason why we shouldn't take a drink. What'll be?" Same thing, eh? Mine, too, and here's looking at you. As I was a-saying—No, ma'am, not at this counter!" to an old woman interposing with a broken-nosed pitcher. "Go 'round to family entrance, and the boy 'll take your order. Somehow ladies 'll never understand," he added soliloquizingly, as woman and pitcher disappeared, "how improper it is to fill their orders right over the public counter. Glad to see you, Mr. McGinnis," to a showily dressed man, who suddenly slid in from the street, respectfully shoving to him an unsolicited glass and bottle. "Have a ball with me this time! You can expect me up at the club some time this evening. Don't want anything, and never do. Get out of this, quick!"—to a timid forlorn-looking street-peddler; accompanying the injunction with a threatening glance and an ominous clenching of the hand. "An' what do you want?" to a seedy, red-nosed being, who crawled beseechingly forward as the peddler disappeared. "Trust for a drink! See you later, young feller. We're selling stuff here, not giving it away. Bounce! Now, there," turning around as the wretched man disappeared, "there's a duck as 'is story could be writ up about. Regular high toned and flush not long ago, but gone all to pieces with rum, lottery tickets and policy playing. Why at one time he'd spend as much as twenty dollars a week over this bar, year in an' year out. Completely busted now. Weak in upper story, too."

"Broken down both in body and mind," I suggested.

"Why, can't you see it?" with an air of surprise. "Must be loony to suppose I'm going to give him a drink for nothing jist because he used to spend his money here like a flipmygilder? Hello, Pop, awake so soon!" to the queer little old man, who again dawned out of a watery unconsciousness on the bench behind the stove, with a preliminary cough and sneeze. "I'm comin' to you."

"I suppose," I remarked, when a gratuitous drink had once more relegated the queer little old man to the dreamful shores, which, perhaps, seemed to him like his native land, "I suppose, then, that Poppy's story, if he has any, must be widely different from that of the representative wretch just referred to?"

"How?" the barkeeper asked, in apparent surprise.

"The policy dabbler, the lottery ticket victim," I explained; "the imbecile who could expect an occasional free drink after having spent his foolish twenty dollars a week here year in and year out [illegible]."

"Oh!" replied the bartender, blissfully unconscious of [illegible] implication; "the old Pop's a gander, as they all call him, [illegible]. You see," with [illegible] confusion of manner, "[illegible] time—sort of under obligations, besides—d'ye understand? His history, too, might be writ up [illegible] you'd hear it, or ever part of it."

Some moments passed before an expressed desire of mine could be gratified, for just about this time the bartender experienced "a sudden spurt of biz," as he called it, and what with setting out and taking in bottles and tumblers, dispensing lager beer, answering calls from the family entrance, replenishing the cheese and cracker dish, and chopping the whisky [illegible] together with an occasional controversy on the subject of "bouncing," a surreptitious [illegible] for the gratification of thirsty policemen at the F. P., and one more alcholic quieting of the queer little old man, whose last exile to dreamland had not been of satisfactory duration, he returned to the interview so much out of breath and discontented that I at once "set 'em up" in my turn, and redirected his active mind to a consideration of Poppy.

"Well, you see, that is about the size of it," said he, leaning far over on his elbows and lowering his voice to a confidential whisper, "Old Pop yonder is pegging out rather lively with pneumonia or something of the sort, an' liquor's about the only thing that keeps him alive. His doctor says that without the stimulant he wouldn't last a week. So there he sets, and there he's been a settin' every day fur a month or two, and I supply thi stimulant. D'ye see?"

"It's really good of you," I observed. "But, then, I suppose the former obligations you spoke of——"

"That's jist it; I'm a payin' 'em off in this way," he interupted. "So every morning the old woman—Pop's wife, you know, and a decent, hard-working old woman she is—brings the old fellow here, while she's out at washing or floor scrubbing, and leaves him sort of in my care till she comes to take him home in the evening, for Pop himself is all but helpless. It's almost time for her to come for him now," he added, with a glance at the clok which indicated a quarter of six.

"I say it's really good of you," repeated the writer, with an inerested glance at the occupant of the bench, who, though still in exile, appeared exceptionally easy, with labored breathing and tremulous starts, as though mutely supplicating for a return of the native health and peace never more for him. "And I suppose the hard-working old wife is likewise grateful to you."

"Well, she is, an' then again, she ain't," said the bartender. "Hold on a minute. He needs another stiffener, I'm a thinking."

Poppy was accordingly aroused sufficiently to imbibe another drink, which ultimately sent him to sleep, yet not without a fit of convulsive but feeble coughing, followed by sundry deep and piteous sighs.

"Oh, he's been as that before," said the bartender, in answer to the writer's look of concern as he again edged in behind the counter. "Yes, the old woman's feelings toward me, that's the oddest thing of all," he continued. "The doctor has told her what Poppy requires to be kept from sinking, you see, and she's willing for me to take care of him in this way while she's out at work. But, then, she's awful pious, and strictly on the temperance bowl herself; d'ye-see?"

I nodded, and there was a fresh interruption by reason of another "spurt" from the street, during which the representative man almost came to blows with an inebriated coal-heaver, who tendered five cents instead of ten for a beverage, but afterward settled it by permitting the coal-heaver to owe him the difference. Then a travel-stained minstrel, with a harp on his back and a desire in his soul to exchange music for whisky, had to be led out by the ear; some lemons were purchased of a vender, who wanted twenty cents change from a quarter, after absorbing a ten cent drink, was threateningly called a "dumbhead," and asked if he "expected to have his cake and eat it, too," whereupon the bartender was once more at my service.

"It's jist as I tell you," he resumed, "the old woman, though compelled to let me take care of Pop in this way, is death on temperance, and pious to boot. Why, let me give you an instance," and here he became confused again. "What if I should tell you that the old people—Pop and his wife—have got a son, strong and healthy, and both able and willing to support them both, but that the old woman refuses to take a cent of his wages—not one solitary copper—and all as a matter of conscience, eh!"

"Wages of dishonesty, perhaps?" I suggested.

"She says so—wages of sin she calls 'em"

"And what does the young man do for a living?" I asked.

"Sells gin, jist as I'm a-doing. He's a bartender," was the reply.

"Ah!"

"Sure as a gun! And the old lady won't take a cent of his money, though she lets me keep the old man around on the same stuff that she shudders to have her son sell. Queer, ain't it?"

"Decidedly."

"Well, that's about all there is to her story and Pop's," he continued, wiping his brow hard, as though to permanently dispel some of the increased uneasiness that had taken possession of him during the recital. "And I think it's blasted hard on the son, I do. For jist look at old Pop there now," he added, directing my attention anew to the queer little old man, who had lapsed into motionlessness, with his hands in his pockets, his chin on his breast, and his poor old hat drawn down over his eyes, half suggesting a permanent banishment to what seemed to constitute the humble Nirvana of his broken life. "Isn't he as happy as a new born baby, and all through me? But here comes a man now—he's been on a Santa Cruz sour for a week; but I notice a change on his face, perhaps to S. O. P. or a rye and seltzer—whose story might be writ up splendid."

The last remark was evoked by the [illegible] entrance of a very large, well-dressed, fine-looking, but somewhat bloated man, who verified the bar-tender's prediction by dropping his cane and asking for old rye whisky and seltzer. He also bought a cigar.

"Knew him, of course?" said the bartender, in a respectful tone, when we were again alone.

"No" I replied.

"What?" he said.

"A Custom House official perhaps; a Congressman, or some other sort of dignitary," I ventured.

"Bigger'n that. It's Bob E——, the retired prize fighter."

"Ah, indeed!"

"Sure's you live; and a dusty chap still in a rumpus, in spite of gout and dissipation, you can bet. But here comes Pop's old woman to carry him off home with her," he added, half sullenly, half shamefacedly, as an elderly lady made her appearance at family entrance, with a resigned but self-protesting air.

"There he is, mother; there's old Poppy waiting for you, and as carm as an infant. He's had a pretty good day of it, too."

The newcomer was thinly clad, and evident of a hard-working, poorly paid station in life. Her face was both kind and stern. She had plentiful, snow white hair. As she stood in a sort of noble shame at the threshold of a sphere which her very instinct abominated, while a sense of duty urged her to its edge, there was a sad dignity in her looks. She merely inclined her head in recognition of the bartender's greeting, turned her regards still more sadly from him to the still motionless figure on the bench, and then moved gently toward it.

"Now, here comes another customer whose story might be written up," hurriedly whispered the bartender, beckoning me to come still nearer, as he planted his elbows on the counter and leaned still further across it. "Never mind Poppy any more, but just twig this man coming in from the street. Why, that man——"

A sharp cry from the gray-haired woman startled us. We turned and ran toward her. The white despair of her wan face chilled my heart. Her hand had recoiled from the shoulder of the old man upon the bench. His forlorn figure had fallen upon its side, with the pinched, discolored lineaments of the face upturned. He had passed into his last exile, whence there was no return.

"I say," muttered my representative bartender when he had summoned a carriage and sent away the body in the old woman's charge, "would you mind stepping around to that political club of mine this evening and making excuse for my unavoidable absence? You see, I'll have to help the old woman to look after poor Pop's remain's."

"Certainly I will. And it's really good of you to thus——"

"Good God!" interrupted the bartender with passionate, but tearful abruptness. "Can't you understand? He was my father, and the poor, dear old woman is my mother!"

How to Cook Beefsteak.

New York Evening post.

It requires courage in the light of our knowledge, and almost daily experience, for one to assert that there is no reason why every beefsteak that is put on the table should not, so far as cooking is concerned, approach the ideal steak. "Subscriber" writes from far Louisiana to know how his cook may be instructed to give him a good beefsteak. A member of my own family has brought the cooking of this article of food to what we consider perfection. The first requirement is not so much a tender and juicy steak, though this is always to be devoutly desired, but a glowing bed of coals, a wire gridiron, a stout one, with good sized wires, a double one so that you can turn the steak without touching it. The steak should not be pounded, only in extreme cases, when it is cut too thick and is "stringy". Attempt nothing else when cooking the steak; have everything else ready for the table; the potatoes and vegetables all in their respective dishes in the warming closet or oven, with the door left open a little way. From 10 minutes onward is needed to cook the steak; and you can easily tell the color of the gravy which runs from the steak, when gently pressed with a knife, as to its condition. If the master of the house likes it "rare done," when there is a suspicion of brown gravy with the red it will be safe to infer that is done enough for him; if, as is generally the case, the next stage is the favorite one, remove the steak from the gridiron the instant the gravy is wholly of a light brown. Remove it to a hot platter, pepper and salt it to suit your taste, put on small lumps of butter, and then then for two brief moments cover it with a hot plate, the two moments being sufficient to carry it to the table. One absolutely essential factor in the preparation of good beefsteak is that it must be served at once. If "Subscriber" can impress it upon his cook that she is not to let the steak stand and steam while she is doing other things, he will be likely to receive his reward for so doing. If he can inspire his cook with a desire to excel, if he can induce her to believe that it is worth while to take pains, he will do an even more important work than to produce a delicious steak. I often think that a good cook must belong to one or two orders—she must be a Christian of great conscientiousness, or a person of abundant culture, whose sole deligt is to do well with thought whatever is undertaken.

We now have canned meats, fruits, milk, vegetables, oysters, fish, jellies, and about everything required except canned under shirts.

A SAFE'S SECRET.

The Reputation of a Gentleman Clouded for Months by the Mysterious Disappearance of $100,000—A Story of the Olden Time.

St. Louis Globe Democrat.

In the early days of the Republic the transfer of Government funds from one part of the country to another was attended with many difficulties to which the custodians of United States treasure are not now subjected. Railroads and telegraph were alike unknown and unthought of, and St. Louis and Washington were nearly a month apart in time. Government funds were intrusted for safe carriage and delivery to private messengers, and the responsibility put upon them was necessarily great. An interesting incident connected with the transfer of a large sum of money from this city to Philadelphia was yesterday narrated to a Globe-Democrat reporter by Secretary H. L. Clark, of the Wiggins Ferry Company.

Said Mr. Clark: "Just prior to the extinction of the old United States Bank, in 1836 or 1837 I think it was, Mr. Cist, a trusted messenger of the United States, one of whose sons has since been Cashier of the State Savings Institution of this city came here from Cincinnati with instructions to take the surplus fund of the St. Louis agency of the Commerical Bank of Cincinnati, a Government institution, and proceed with it to Philadelphia. At that time I was assistant teller in the St. Louis agency, and remember Mr Cist's visit well. The money for which he came was between $500,000 and $600,000, received largely from the sale of Government lands in the adjoining States. People had confidence in other folks' honesty then, and no hesitancy was felt in turning this large sum over to Mr. Cist. This was before German gold began to circulate, and the money was all in paper of different denominations. The entire sum was counted out and placed in an ordinary carpet-bag, such as travelers in those days were accustomed to use. In the lot was one small package of $100,000 in 100 $1,000 bills, to which Mr. Cist's attention was especially called. From here to Cincinnati the journey had to be made by river, consuming about a week's time. The carpet-bag was turned over to the clerk and kept in the office until that city was reached. There enough money was obtained from the Commercial Bank to bring the entire sum up to $1,000,000 or $1,200,000. With this amount Mr. Cist proceeded by stage over the mountains to Philadelphia. Arriving in that city toward night, he found himself too late to gain admission to the United States Bank on that day, and so made arrangements with a noted hardware company of that time—McAllister & Co.—to put the money in their safe for the night. This was accordingly done, he removing the precious contents of his carpet bag and placing the various packages on the middle shelf of the safe. On the following day the money was removed and taken, but judge of Mr. Cist's consternation when the $100,000 package proved to be missing. He remembered distinctly of having seen it in this city and in Cincinnati, and was utterly at a loss to account for its disappearance. McAllister & Co's. safe was searched, and no stone left unturned to discover the money. The Commercial Bank of Cincinnati offered $10,000 reward for the detection of the thief or return of the money, but it was all to no purpose. The character which he had always borne for honesty and faithfulness was blasted, and though no positive proof could be found of his guilt, his reputation was entirely destroyed. About eight months later a small sum of money was found missing from McAllister & Co's. safe, and in the search for it an employe of the company found a small opening behind the middle shelf on which it had been placed. An iron hook was secured and its depths explored. The very first haul brought to light the mysteriously missing $100,000 package, and several other sums were also recovered from the depths. Mr. Cist was made happy again, and the confidence formerly felt in him was restored. The $10,000 reward was claimed by the person who made the discovery, but for some reason the payment was objected to, and the matter was brought into litigation in the courts. I don't remember how it was settled, but take it all in all, the loss of the money and it subsequent recovery was one of the most remarkable occurrences in the history of the United States Treasury monetary transactions in the early days."

The Story of a Sprain.

Paris Letter.

The foot of a danseuse is as important to lovers of the ballet as the chest is of a tenor is to the lovers of music. The habitues of the opera have now an all-absorbing topic for conversation in the foot of Mlle. Mauri, which that estimable ballerina sprained some time ago. The treatment that she is undergoing for this sprain deserves mention as well as the history of the manner in which she came to adopt it. An old habitue of the opera, who remembered that a similar accident once happened to Fanny Elssler, communicated to Mlle. Mauri the treatment that had cured her predecessor. This treatment was to go to the abattoir every morning and insert the bare foot into the warm entrails of a freshly killed sheep or calf. Mlle. Mauri, in despair at the slowness of her recovery, determined to try the efficacy of this remedy. But Rosita Mauri, if a grand artist, is also a woman, and on the occasion of her first visit to the abattoir at La Vilette, when the butcher appeared, armed with his long knife and followed by a young calf, bleating as though conscious of the fate that was in store for it, she shut her eyes and declared: "No! no; I can never see such a sight. Let the poor animal live. I will not have it die for me!"

The superintendent of the abattoir explained to the tender-hearted danseuse that the calf was not going to die for her; it was going to die to satisfy the hunger of the Parisians—of some of the abonnes of the opera, perhaps. Whether she used its body as a remedy for her foot or not, the fate of the calf was sealed all the same. The Superintendent, however, sent for another calf, whose execution took place behind a curtain, through which Mlle. Mauri passed her foot to receive the treatment prescribed. Traditionally the famous danseuse of another generation, used always to have sprains that were the frequent torment of her admirers. These sprains were the inventions of her father, a very ordinary manufacturer of ballets, but an incomparable guardian of his daughter's fame, fortune and honor. If he was in a bad humor, or if he wanted an increase in her salary, the sprain at once made its appearance.

Truth in the Lame-Kiln Club.

Detroit Free Press.

"It am my painful dooty," said the president, as he opened the meeting, "to inform you dat death has again invaded our circle. Brudder Slipback Burbanks, of Syracuse, N. Y., am no mo' on airth. He breathed his last three days ago, after an illness of sixteen days. What axshun will de club take in de matter?"

"I move dat we send de widder a resolushun of sympathy," announced Judge Cadaver.

"I reckon dat we had better resolve dat de club has lost a shinin' light," timidly added Pickles Smith.

"De club will neither resolve nor for'd any resolutions of sympathy," remarked the president. "De widder an' chill'en can't eat a resolution, eben if written in blue ink. De seckretary will mail her a $10 greenback from de club funds, an' express de hope dat she am dooin' well under de circumstances.

"Dis club hasn't lost no shinin' light by de death of Brudder Burbanks. He was no shiner. Fact am, he was a werry common sort of a humpbacked cull'd pusson, an' it took him as long to add seven an' eight togedder as it would some udder men to airn $2. He was accomplished in nothing; he excelled only in killin' time when at work by de day. He would be no better off if we pronounced 40 lyin' eulogies on his character. He can be no worse off if we tell de honest truth. De usual emblem of sorrow will be hung to de knob of de inner door fur de space of two weeks, an' we will remember Brudder Burbanks as extremely good-natured, eben if extremely lazy."

Some Accidents of History.

London Standard.

M. Fourier wrote a book on events which never took place, and Lord Beaconsfield's father was the author of a learned essay on history which might have been enacted. An equally curious volume might be penned on trifles which have determined great events. It was but a trifle which gave Spain for so many generations the lordship of the new world, and enabled her by the wealth which she derived from that source to become the most powerful nation in Europe. It is well known that Columbus, dispirited by the refusals which he met at so many courts dispatched his brother Bartolomeo to ask aid from Henry VII. of England. But on the way the messenger fell into the hands of pirates, and by the time he reached London he was so destitute that he had to try and earn the money to clothe himself in proper style before he could be presented at court. But by this time it was too late. Even the fact that Ferdinand and Isabella supplied the funds to equip the expedition was mainly due to the accident that Juan Perez de Marchena, the Queen's confessor, happened to be passing at the very moment when the weary mariner was knocking at the door of the La Rabida monastry to beg a little bread and water for his boy Diego, and was struck with the noble face of the dusty pedestrian. Had Bartolomeo Colon reached London in time, had Christoval been by any chance a little later or a little earlier at the monastery door, the fate of Europe might have been changed and the destiny of the Anglo Saxon race altered.

Three centuries later it was again nearly revolutionized, for in 1806 the English held Buenos Ayres, and it is no secret that Napoleon was almost persuaded to abandon Europe as a field for his ambition, and try what he could accomplish in the way of carving out an empire among the dissatisfied provinces of South America. When citizen Bonaparte seemed little likely to sit on the throne of Louis Capet, he was on the point of offering his sword to the sultan, as at a later period Von Moltke actually did. It is curious now to speculate what would now have been the present state of the eastern question had Napoleon carried his intentions into effect, or supposing that Moltke had remained in the Turkish service, whether the Danish war would have been fought, or Prussia's supremacy established at Sadowa or Sedan.

The cropping of Louis VII.'s chin brought on three centuries of bloodshed, and a sarcastic remark of Frederick the Great on Elizabeth Petrovna of Russia roused that virtuous empress to take such a vigorous part in the seven years' war that at one time Prussia seemed well nigh stricken unto death. Even Catharine II.—profoundly suspicious of Potsdam after the "scandal about Queen Elizabeth"—carefully examined her husband's correspondence before she concluded an alliance with the royal letter writer. It is hardly forty years since Louis Philippe threatened war against the Texan republic because an irate citizen had shot the trespassing pigs of the French ambassador. As it was he prevented the Lone Star sovereignty from floating their European loan, and thus the king and the pigs combined hastened the annexation of Texas to the United States. The Dutch are said to have "jockeyed" us out of Malacca in exchange for Java, by representing on the map, which our simple-minded envoys took for granted, the one territory as large and the other as small, and among the most firmly rooted traditions of American diplomacy is one which represents the English commissioners as agreeing to the surrender of Oregon, "because a country in which a salmon does not rise to the fly cannot be worth much." Laws have been altered through accidents before the Queen's printer's boy forgot to deliver Lord Beaconsfield's amendment to a bill.

But if trifles have determined the fate of laws and nations, accidents equally small have caused men to follow pursuits the results of which have been not much less momentous to culture and civilization. Father Malebranche devoted himself to philosophy after reading Descartes's "L'Homme;" Cowley became a poet owing to his perusal of Spenser's "Fairy Queen," and Sir Joshua Reynolds had never thought of painting until Richardson's "Treatise" fell into his hands. Shakspere might have ended his life as a prosperous wool-comber had he been a prudent young tradesman; Corneille showed no liking for any literature except the law until he fell in love and felt compelled to tell the lady so in poetry, and Moliere might have remained making tapestry had not his grandfather, [illegible] this [illegible] by wishing he could be an actor like Monrose. Balboa might never have discovered the Pacific had he not been unsuccessful as a shopkeeper in Hispaniola, and found it necessary to flee to the mainland concealed from his creditors in a cask on board Euciedo's vessel, and it is certain that had Cortez become a well-bred lawyer in Salamanca he would never have lived to proudly tell Charles V. that he had given him more provinces than his father had left him cities. Ignatius Loyola was a soldier, and the order of Jesuits might never have been found had he not accidentally beguiled the tedium of inaction necessitated by a wound with reading "The Lives of Saints." Gibbon determined to write his famous work after listening to the monks singing vespers in the temple of Jupiter at Rome; and La Fontaine was stimulated to cultivate literature after hearing some verses of Malherbe.

Faraday might have remained a journeyman bookbinder had not kindly Mr. Dance invited him to hear Sir Humphrey Davy lecture, and Vaucanson only took to studying the mechanism of clocks to beguile the weary hours which he had to pass while attending his mother at confession.

Had Sir James Simpson been successful in his candidacy for the post of a Highland parish doctor, the world might have lost the inestimable boon of chloroform for many years, and to the wise discretion which the college of surgeons exercised in refusing their diploma to Oliver Goldsmith we owe the "Vicar of Wakefield" and the "Deserted Village."

A French Fortune Teller.

Paris Letter.

Desbarolles, the noted author of "The Mysteries of the Hand," has returned to Paris. This professor of the singular art of chiromancy is not, as one might imagine, an ordinary fortune-teller or a vulgar imposter. He was the intimate friend of the elder Dumas, and some of the most noted personages of France have found their way to his unpretending suite of apartments on the Boulevard St. Michel. He affects none of the airs of a sorcerer. His simple little parlor is as common a place as possible, its only remarkable ornament being a portrait of the elder Dumas hanging upon the wall, with the inscription beneath it: "To my dear friend Desbarolles," penned by the novelist himself. A letter from Dumas, neatly framed, hangs near this portrait, and a copy of Les Impressions de Voyage occupies the place of honor on the table. A good many Americans, I am told, come to test the skill of the famous chiromancian. In one instance two American ladies came to consult him. After telling them a number of curious particulars respecting their traits of character, their tastes, their intellectual tendencies, etc., he added some information respecting their future. To the one predicted the approach of the greatest sorrow that her life had yet known—she lost a near and passionately-beloved relative before three months had elapsed. To the other he said: "You will shortly be placed in great danger of death; should you escape the coming peril, your life will be a long and happy one." Before the summer, which was then just opening, was at an end, this second questioner came near being drowned while on a fishing excursion with some friends near Paris, and was only saved by the courage and presence of mind of one of her companions, who seized her by the wrist and managed to hold her above water till more efficient aid could be summoned. Desbarolles was also frequently consulted by the Empress Eugenie, was fond of prying into the future, despite of her bigoted Catholicism. It is said that he predicted to her in 1860 that she would lose her throne, and would end her days in exile. "Not upon the scaffold, M. Desbarolles?" asked the Empress eagerly, as she had always been haunted by a presentiment that she was destined to perish as did Marie Antoinette. On receiving a decided negative, she sought to learn no more. Desbarolles also foretold Mme. Musard the splendid fortune which she was to owe to the liberality of the King of Holland, and which made of her one of the richest women in Europe. But it was not from Desbarolles, but from the scarcely less famous clairvoyant, Edmond, that Louis Napoleon was fated to die by the knife in London. The Emperor, who was extremely superstitious, as was also Napoleon the Great, fancied that he had to meet his death at the hands of some political refugee. As he died from the effects of a surgical operation, the prediction was, oddly enough fulfilled, though in a different sense from what is at first apparent. Desbarolles, is a small, dried-up, white haired personage, with very charming and polished manners. He is now about 70 years of age.

Wild Speculation in the West.

Wall Street News.

A man wearing a Buffalo Bill outfit attracted considerable attention at the Grand Central depot the other day, and one among the crowd finally asked him:

"Any chances to make money out in Dakota?"

"I should rather remark!" was the reply.

"No chance for speculation, I suppose."

"There ain't, eh? What do you call it when you can trade a wolfskin even up for a squaw who'll trade at any military post in the country for a mule worth a clean $30."

And he bestowed upon the questioner such a look of pity and contempt that the man fell back and sat down like a load of brick.

MODERN NOVELETTE.

The Horse Reporter Objects to the Hero's Want of Pluck.

Chicago Tribune.

"Good day."

A very nice looking young man stood in the doorway of the editorial room and gazed in a benign way at the occupants of the apartment.

"Would it be possible for me to sell the Tribune a story?" he continued.

"What kind of a tale have you ground out?" asked the horse reporter.

"The story," said the visitor, "is one in which the triumph of love is depicted, and—"

"It isn't one of those 'and as Ethel stood there in the soft moonlight, her little figure sharply outlined against the Western sky, there was a loud crash in Coastcliff Castle, and the girl knew that her mother had dropped the doughnut jar' kind of stories is it?—because they won't do," said the horse reporter.

"There is nothing at all about doughnuts in this story, replied the visitor, rather haughtily, "but if you like I can read a portion of it."

"All right."

"Where shall I begin?"

"Anywhere" replied the horse reporter. "Suppose you give us the last porter. "Suppose you give us the last sentence of it."

I should hardly think——"

Oh, never mind about that. We do all the thinking for young authors that come up here."

The visitor seated himself and read as follows:

"For answer Glady's beautiful eyes dropped, but she gave him both her hands, and there, under the heavy fruited trees, the golden bees flying all about them, and the air filled with their dreamy monotone, he drew her upon his breast, and, raising her long ringlets to his lips, kissed them reverently."

"That's the last sentence, is it? asked the horse reporter.

"Yes, sir."

"I should hope it was. It makes me very tired to read about such ducks."

"Why, I don't see—" began the author.

"Of course you don't. Probably you were the hero of the novel. Did you ever hear of Thompson's colt?"

The visitor admitted his ignorance concerning that historical animal.

"Well, Thompson's colt," continued the horse reporter, "was such an enternal idiot that he swam across the river to get a drink. Now, that fellow in your story is a dead match for him."

"I don't understand—"

"Probably not. It is not expected of literary people. But I tell you, this young fellow in your story is out under an apple-tree holding a girl's hands, isn't he?"

"Yes."

"And, according to the story, he 'raised her long ringlets to his lips and kissed them reverently.' That's right?"

"Certainly."

"Now, what do you think of a young man that would go nibbling around a girl's back hair when she had her face with her? Such stories do not possess the fidelity to nature that should ever characterize the work of genius. No, my genial imbecile, you can not get the weight of this powerful journal on the side of any such young man as your story depicts. We were once young and upon the apple tree racket ourselves."

"Good day." said the author, starting for the door.

"So long," was the response. "Make George act like a white man in your story, and come around again."

English Girls of the Day.

London Letter in San Francisco Argonaut.

People do say it is this constant companionship with men, and mixing with them in their field sports, that give the fashionable English girl of the day all her love for "manish" ways and make her the slangy, horsey, rapid creature we often find her. Perhaps people are right. Yet what real harm, after all, if girls do wear standup collars and scarf pins, and hunt, fish, shoot, and play billiards and smoke.

None, certainly, if their hearts are all right. Besides look at the models they have. The Empress of Austria seems only happy in the saddle, and no less personages than the Princesses Louise and Beatrice smoke cigarettes. Such actions are, of course, likely to shock the sensibilities, not alone of our grandmothers, but a certain type of young ladies whose conversational powers are limited to understanding replies of "yes" and "no," and whose proper bringing up is exhibited in a painfully studious avoidance of either showing her feet or separating her knees while sitting down.

But a woman nowadays does not care to please her own sex as much as the other, and it is only too clear which sort of a young lady is the most attractive to men and which kind of a girl gets the dances at balls and the most attration everywhere. Men are pretty good judges of women, and if they don't object or are willing to make their wives out of girls who know more of horse flesh than they do of botany, and prefer a whiff of tobacco smoke to ylang-ylang or Atkinson's white rose, it is their own lookout and no one else's business.

I know a young lady who lives down in one of the Southern counties. She is one of the prettiest girls in England, has five thousand a year in her own right, is just three-and-twenty, and the daughter of a peer, whose pedigree goes back to the Conquest, and whose country house is the show-place of the county. To look at her, you would think her the quietest of the quiet, and that she hadn't an idea beyond crochet and weak tea. But she hunts, has her own stable, keeps four hunters, now and then rides a steeple chase, buys and sells her own horses without the help of any one; has her own wine merchant, wine-celler and tobacconist; fences, boxes, skates, and rows; has her boudoir decorated with foils, gloves, whips, horseshoes, and hunting trophies; smokes cigarettes during the day, and cigars after dinner; is a capital judge of claret and port, and can tell Amontillado from Marsala with her eyes shut; is a first-rate shot with a shotgun or rookrifle; draws her own charges, and pays her own bills; and last, though not least, has a delightful way of letting you see her foot and ankle when she puts one leg over the other on sitting down, that would make a prime old dowager faint, and get her sat upon directly by the sly ones. Yet she has never been known to flirt; has refused more offers than the quiet ones ever dreamed of receiving, and once, it is related, taught the Prince of Wales a lesson by stopping in the middle of a waltz with him at a state ball at Buckingham Palace, and refused to go on, because he held her tighter than she considered proper. You can't call a girl like that fast. She knows enough to take care of herself, and if her companionship with the young swells of the day and her imitation of their talk and ways, has taught her to prefer their friendship to their love, it is not unlikely she is nearer right in the estimate of her fellow-beings than are the dragonesses of propriety who regard her with abhorence, but are willing to sell their bashful maidens to the first libertine or titled scapegrace whose establishment and rent roll make him in their eyes a desirable parti.

A Shaking Mountain.

About three months ago a number of miners from San Francisco explored El Monte Amargo, the Bitter mountain in northern Chili. Near the top of the mountain they found something of which they had heard marvelous stories—the Eye of the Gold. This mine of poetic name was examined to the disappointment of the whole party. Evening had crept on and it was too late to descend, so the Californians lighted a fire under a rock near the summit, there to pass the night. A furious wind was blowing from the neighboring desert of Atamaca. Suddenly the wind dropped; an unnatural calm and silence followed. Then came a confused murmur as from a distant, angry crowd of people, swelling to a grinding, crushing sound. A slight shiver ran through the solid mountain, succeeded by a more positive, rocking motion. The men got upon their feet as quickly as possible, but in another moment all were shaken down. One of the prospectors says that the mountain seemed about to sink beneath them. A horrid roar pervaded all space, and Monte Amargo bellowed like the wind stirred surface of the ocean. The men were seized with dreadful nausea and an indescribable feeling of despair. The frightful phenomenon lasted less than half a minute, and when it was over earth and sky, were as peaceful as ever. They had experienced "a trembler," said to be worse on the Bitter mountain than at any other known place.

A Human Monster.

M. Paul Bert has lately sent the editor of the La Nature, from Geneva, two photographs of a human monster exhibited there, living and aged five years, having been born in Turin in 1877. It has two heads, four arms and two chests, but one abdomen and pelvis, and two legs; that is, it is double above the middle of the body. The fusion of the two bodies begins at the sixth rib. From due examination, and from what has been observed in previous monsters of the kind (they were named Xiphodyme by Isdore-Geoffroy St. Hilaire), it may be affirmed that there are four lungs two hearts and two stomachs; the small intestine is double at its commencement, but in greater part simple. There are really two individuals. The right leg only obeys the right individual, who alone feels pinching of it; and similarly with the left. The sensibility of each half of the body is in exclusive rapport with the head of the same side. The two individuals were baptized doubly under the names Jean and Jacques. They are equally developed (except a slight club foot on Jacques leg), and intellectually they are much alike. Their intelligence is normal; they reply to qestions of visitors in French, German and Italian. They seem gentle and amiable, also lively, often playing together while lying on cushions or on the knees of their reputed father. It is said they have never been ill. It has been shown, in the case of other double monsters, that one may have an inflammatory fever, while the other continued well, but the like would not occur with infectious disease or poisoning. Several cases of these Xiphodyne monsters have been recorded in history, but very few have lived.

How Monkeys are Taken.

An old, hard cocoanut is taken, says the London field, and a very small hole is made in the shell. Furnished with this and a pocketful of boiled rice, the sportsman sallies into the forest, and stops beneath a tree tenanted with monkeys. Within full sight of these inquisitive spectators, he first eats a little rice, and puts a quantity into the cocoanut, with all the ostentation possible. The nut is then laid upon the ground, and the hunter retires to a convenient ambush. The reader may be sure that no sooner is the man out of their sight than the monkeys race helter skelter for the cocoanut. The first arrival peeps into it, and seeing the splendid store of rice inside, squeezes his hand in through the tiny hole and clutches a handful. Now, so paramount is greed over every other feeling concerned with monkey nature that nothing will induce the creature to relinquish his hold. With his hand thus clasped he cannot possibly extricate it, but the thought that, if he lets go, one of his brethren will obtain the feast, is overpowering. The sportsman soon appears upon the scene. The uninnumbered monkies fly in all directions, but the unfortunate brute who still will not let the rice go is thereby handicapped, beyond hope, with a cocoanut as large as himself—a state of affairs quite fatal to rapid locomotion, either terrestrial or arboreal. The sequel is that he falls an easy capture to the hunter, a victim to his own greed. Even when caught he reads in the actions of his captors a design to rob him of his rice, and he clutches it all the harder, and the very first thing he does when the nut is cracked and the hand released is to cram its contents into its mouth. Thoughts of escape come afterward.

JOCOSITIES.

Only a woman's hair,
Binds the now to the past,
Only a single thread,
Too frail to last.
Only a woman's hair,
Threading a tear and a sigh,
Only a woman's hair
Found to-day in the pie.

To reprove a fool is simply lost labor; therefore do not sit down and scold yourself.

Ben Johnson: "Bad men excuse their faults; good men leave them." Ben always called wives "faults."

No matter how loose an engagement ring may be, the diamond never slips around on the inside of a lady's finger.

An exchange has an article on "how to treat wives." This seems to remind us of the old rule about cooking a rabbit—"first catch him."

Said cynical, ungallent Diderot: "Women swallow at one mouthful the lie that flatters, and drink drop by drop, the truth that is bitter."

A miner fell in love with a girl at first sight, she was easily smitten with him, and the entire courtship was, "My pet?" "You bet."

The Boston Globe objects to the abolition of vests, on the ground that Illinois men would have no convenient pocket for their cloves.

"What's in a name?" Bright child—"I know what they call 'em, mamma, when there's three twins." Mamma—"What, Katy?" B. C.—"Giblets."

Some women are proud of a new sealskin, but just wait until you come across one who has got five gallons of mince meat prepared for the winter season.

The movement in the East to abolish the vest has petered out. When a man takes off his coat at a Sunday-school picnic to ladle out the ice cream he wants something between the public and knots in his suspenders.

"I put a secret kiss under the postage stamp for my darling," wrote a Cincinnati girl. She deftly removed the stamp by steam, but found no kiss, only some remnants of plug tobacco and a strong odor of beer. They are not married yet, and not likely to be.

Some time ago a very innocent young lady paid a visit to a lady friend, who, a few days before, had presented her good man with a son. She had, of course, to see the baby. After looking hard at the little stranger some time she remarked: "Dear me, Maggie, how sunburnt it is."

"Well, remarked a young M. D. just from college, "I suppose the next thing will be to hunt a good location and then wait for something to do, like 'Patience on a monument.'" "Yes," said a bystander, "and it won't be long after you begin before the monuments will be on the patients."

A Chinaman thus describes his experience at draw-poker: "I diaw thlee cardee, get flo acee, bet five dolla, nobody clom in. Next times I diaw two cardee, get do kingee, bet ten dolla, nobody clom in. Next times I diaw one cardee, get flo flushee, bet fifteen dolla, everybody clom in, Chinaman busted."

An Irishman tried to shoot a chirping bird with an old Queen Anne musket. He fired. The bird with a chirrup or two, flew away unconcerned in the foreground, and Pat was swiftly and noiselessly laid on his spine in the background. Picking himself up and shaking his fist at the bird, he exclaimed: "Be jabers, ye wouldn't have chirruped if ye'd been at this end of the gun!"

A lady had in her employ an excellent girl who had one fault. Her face was always in a smudge. Mrs. —— tried to tell her to wash her face without offending her, and at last resorted to strategy. "Do you know, Bridget," she remarked in a confidential manner, "it is said if you wash the face every day in hot soapy water it will make you beautiful?" "Will it now?" answered the wily Bridget. "Sure it's a wonder ye niver tried it yourself, ma'am!"

"You musn't touch the top of the baby's head said a mother to her little four-year-old; "she has a soft spot there that is very tender." The youngster gazed at it curiously for a moment and then asked, "Do all babies have soft spots on their heads?" "Yes," Did papa have a soft spot on the top of his head when he was a boy?" "Yes," replied the mother, with a sigh, "and he has got it yet." And the old man, who had overheard the conversation from an adjoining room, sang out, "Yes, indeed, he has, my dear boy, or he would be a single man to-day."

A Thrilling Spectacle.

Boston Journal.

A thrilling incident was witnessed in Lewiston, Me., on Saturday. The painters who are at work on St. Joseph's church have raised a chain of ladders to the top of the spire. While the workmen were at dinner, some passers by saw a man climbing the ladders, now and then waving his hat and uttering a strange shout. It became evident that he was intoxicated. The form was soon recognized as that of a drunken Lewiston ragman. He seemed impelled by the insane desire to reach the cross at the summit of the steeple. He mounted ladder after ladder. A crowd gathered. At times the climber wavered, and all who saw him thought he would fall and be dashed to pieces. He gained the cross, put his hat on it, and then began his descent. Two men went up and helped the fellow. But for this timely assistance, he probably would have fallen. The crowd watched with eager eyes until he reached the ground, pale and disordered, and started off, after one delirious shout of exultation. His escape from destruction seems almost miraculous.

A San Francisco judge has decided that an unloaded revolver is not a deadly weapon. It may not be in San Francisco, but in this part of the country it is the only kind of weapon that blows the roof off a man who blows into the muzzle.

A Recipe to Make Pretty Women.

A celebrated beauty, whose complexion at 60 was fresher than that of our women at 30, told me her secret this summer, writes a New York correspondent, and it was divided into two parts: First, she never used washrag or towel on her face, but washed it with her hands, rinsing it off with a soft sponge. She used clear water in the morning, but white castile soap or very warm water at night, and, after drying it on a soft towel, she would take a flesh brush and rub her cheeks, chin and forehead. Second, if she was going to be up late at night, she always slept as many hours in the day as she expected to be awake beyond her usual time. She finished her little sermon on beauty preservation by saying: "Soft water and sound sleep keep off wrinkles and spots, and girls should give more attention to this than they do, for

'With the coming of the crow's feet
Is the going of the beaux's feet.'"

An Angry Duchess.

London World.

Such a scene as that which happened in the "Birdcage" at Newmarket, previous to the commencement of racing on Thursday, was never before witnessed on a race course. Martini and Narcissa were telegraphed as starters for the Subscription stakes, and Wood, the jockey, was in his scarlet jacket and cap, waiting for orders. But he came in for a "wigging" instead from the dowager Duchess of Montrose, who followed him across the enclosure, ejaculating in a loud voice: "How dare you weigh contrary to my orders! You knew that we had decided not to run any horses today! We will not endure such abuse as we have been subjected to in the papers!" Turning upon Sherrard, her trainer, who came up at the moment, the duchess "read the riot act" to him in similar terms, and bursting into a paroxysm of tears, fairly broke down Leaning forward on the rail which provides a passage for the jockeys and trainers to the weighing-room, her grace cried piteously; whereupon Sir George Chetwynd came to the rescue, and conducted the duchess into one of the open saddling stalls, away from the public gaze. On recovering composure, the lady insisted upon Martini's number being taken down; but, on being informed by one of the stewards that such a step would necessitate their fining Mr. Crawford £50, the horse was allowed to start. His success added fuel to the flame, as did the subsequent defeat of other Bedford lodge favorites that day.

Walkerton's Weird Wonder.

South Bend Tribune.

About four miles east of Walkerton, on the Baltimore & Ohio track, is a bridge some 50 feet long which spans a dry ravine. Near by is the steam saw-mill of Davis & Wallace. Some four years ago a man was accidentally shot and killed at the saw-mill. The bridge is considered somewhat dangerous for the passage of trains, and the gulley is being filled up by the railroad company In the meantime they considered it prudent to have a night-watchman at the bridge, and sent one of their most trustworthy men, Mr. Luke, a middle-aged gentleman, well known in Walkerton for his veracity. Mr. Luke went down to the bridge and built a fire before which he drowsed while waiting for the train. While seated by the fire nodding, he was astounded to see the body of a man, lying with its head in the hottest part of the fire, and the body partly in the embers. He jumped up, greatly alarmed, and catching the man by his feet, pulled him out. He was still more alarmed when he saw that the man was as free from any serious results of the fire bath as a salamander. In fact, he appeared to like it, for, a short time after, Mr. Luke found him lying in the fire again, and a second time pulled him out. The man did not speak, and finally vanished noiselessly into the darkness. Mr. Luke watched the night out, and the next day informed the company that he did not wish to watch at the bridge again, and if they insisted upon his doing so he would "take his time" and quit their service. He refused to give any reasons for his actions, and did not even tell his wife what he had seen. The company sent down, in his place, the next night, a man named Philip Augustine. Augustine, like Luke, drowsed before the fire, and was suddenly awakened by the noise of locomotive bells ringing incessantly and apparently in the air, as there were no locomotive in sight, nor did any make their appearance while the ringing continued. He noticed at the same time that the steam saw-mill was in full operation, although there was not a person about it. Augustine managed to stay the night out, and when he returned to Walkerton next morning, related his experience and refused to watch again. He was laughed at and his story generally discredited. The next night Frank Bickford volunteered to watch at the bridge, and his experience was pretty much the same as Augustine's. Mr. Luke then told his experience, and his story is accepted as truthful. The railroad watch has been abondoned for the present, but a volunteer squad will go down every night and investigate.

A short time ago at this bridge a red light signal—danger signal, was shown and the engineer stopped his train and ran to the bridge, but neither he nor his fireman could find a soul there. Among the superstitious it is believed that the spirit of the man who was accidently killed there is doing all this mischief.

Artemus Ward to the Young Ladies at The Seminary.

Artemus Ward, after delivering a lecture once in New London, Conn., was asked by the principal of a young ladies' high school in the place to pay a visit to her institution the next day. He went away like "an amoosin cuss," and made the girls a speech. While walking to the academy a street runaway occurred. A terrified horse went tearing over the pavement, with what Artemus called "the forequarters" of a wagon clattering at his heels. This incident Artemus ingeniously utilized in his address.

The vehicular elopement which has just taken place, young ladies, has furnished us with a timely topic of discourse. Young ladies seminaries are ever exposed to runaways. Once when traveling with my show, I came upon a female institute. There were ladders, and lads too, as to that, at every window. Many perpendiculars, carrying fainting horizontals to the ground. "Fire!" I shouted. "None of that," replied a solemn voice from the orchard. "There ain't no fire; these are only young fellows running off with their sweethearts." Their is moral entertainment for man and beast in this runaway. No horse, if attached to it, will run away with it, but the more a young man is attached to a young woman, the more he will run away with her, leaving no trace, in fact none of the harness behind. Young ladies, since I have stood before your beautiful faces, I have lost something, and if you or the boy that sweeps out should find a red object looking like a coral breast-pin that has been stepped on, you may know it is my poor busted heart.

A reasonable proposition: Peasant—"I wish to get a divorce; my wife drinks too much." Priest—"How can you say such a thing—you who are drunk every day?" Peasant—"That's just the reason. Some one in the family has got to be sober."

KING'S MAGIC TOOTH ACHE CURE

If you feel drowsy, debilitated, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver, or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR OR MEDICINE.

The cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World.

An EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC for all diseases of the Liver Stomach and Spleen.

Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons!

Indiana, April 11, '78.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had suffered from weakness, for 8 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 25th, '78.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before using. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 28, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $3. Please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 21.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2 '78.—Last January I got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer now suffering in the same way and wish one No. 2 box.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, NOV. 30, 1882

DEMOCRATS will have in the next congress a duty to perform in regard to the national finances. They will have it in their power to do the country a signal benefit. The boasted financial measures of the republican party, have been in the main, a series of stupendous blunders. They have in various ways, and often purposely, blocked the way to the payment of the national debt. They have paid one dollar, where they could have paid two, but for their stupid policy in regard to the financial management of the government and the country. They have placed burdens on the people, where they were not needed, and oppressed them with an indirect taxation that merely enriched a few men, but brought the general government no revenue. They have squandered the public revenues in useless and lavish ways which did the public little or no good, and for which there was no public demand. They have created and maintained a force of public officials of various grades, greatly in excess of the needs of the public service. On this increased list of public servants, has been placed the burden of only eight hours of labor, such as it is, each day, with a liberal allowance, of a month or two each year as a furlough which they can spend at home or otherwise, as they choose, their pay still going on. This fulough is more noticeable election year, when they are sent home, often for a month or more before election day, and are used to continue the federal government in the hands of the existing administration or its party friends, whether such party is conforming to the wishes of the people or not. And through this very means, too, the general government does more to corrupt the politics of the country than is done by any other cause. These and many other evils that have been allowed to grow upon us, both in our financial system and through that into civil service, it will be expected of the democratic party, to check and as far as possible, to reform, when they find themselves again in the majority in the national congress, in December, 1883. It is true, the executive and and judicial departments of the government will still be in the hands of the republicans, and they can do much to stop the wheels of reform by interposing the powers they possess, but it is to be hoped that a sufficient amount of good sense and patriotism, will by that time have intered into those departments to induce them to assist the representatives of the people to some of these greatly needed reforms.

Two years ago the democrats of Dallas, Tex. paid $1000 for a fine flag to be given to the state giving the greatest democratic majority. It was taken by Georgia, which gave the highest that year. Now, the Georgians are thinking of turning it over to the state of New York, which has just given the largest majority ever given by a single state in the Union.

MR. E. ZIMMERMAN, the able editor of the Valparaiso Messenger, will be a candidate before the coming legislature, for director of the state prison at Michigan City. Mr. Zimmerman has a host of friends in the north part of the state who are urging him for the place. He is honest and competant, and as good a man for the place, as could be found.

HON. D. D. MOODY, of DeKalb Co., who made such a gallant fight for representative and pulled through with a good majority, is spoken of as a suitable candidate for speaker of the house of representatives at Indianapolis. Mr. Moody has served one term in the legislature, and is said to be well posted in parliamentary law, and his friends would like to see him succeed.—[Columbia City Herald.

THE Headlight again flings out its oft-repeated lie, that the editor of the COURIER went back on a part of the ticket in 1880. The editor of the Headlight is the only man in the county that believes the silly assertion, and it is charitable to suppose that even he knows better when sober.

SOME of our republican exchanges were glorifying over the defeat of Allen Zollars, for supreme judge. They are a little premature. The story was started by the Chicago Times, but was at once settled by a look at the records at Indianapolis, which gave him a majority of 5,151 votes.

THE tickets used in the late election, in San Francisco were probably the longest ever known. Each full ticket contained ninety names. They do business on a liberal scale in the golden state.

THURLOW WEED, the veteran journalist, died at his home in New York City last Wednesday morning. He was over 85 years old and served in the war of 1812.

MR. CERTIA, democratic candidate for sheriff in Allen county, is taking steps to secure a re-count of the votes, as he believes mistakes have been made which, if corrected, will elect him.

GERBER'S net majority in this district is 94.

BUTLER.

A. F. Pinchis is still poorly.

Crane's new building is ready for the roof.

Tim Knisely's large brick building is under roof.

Z. L. Kindig has moved into his elegant new dwelling.

Our lecture association seems to have been killed in the bud.

Mr. Haskins went over to Auburn Friday on a business trip.

Christmas is approaching and Christmas trees will soon be in order.

The rail road shops have not been removed yet, plenty of talk however.

A general observance of Thanksgiving will be the order of the day in Butler.

The Wabash authorities are making arrangements to take possession of the land they need for their reservoir.

Mrs. Frank Zimmerman, of Auburn, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. R. H. Weamer, returned home Friday.

Steifel Bros., are closing out their stock at auction, moving very slowly however.

Knisely, Boots & Co., new banking house is nearly up to the second floor. It was commenced last Thursday.

O. L. Young has sold his new dwelling to Mr. Barnum, our butter and egg merchant. Consideration $1,000

Mary Emerson returned from her long sojourn in Kansas, on Friday of last week. She is well pleased with the western country.

Thos. Blackwell came near having another fire last week. This time it was his residence, which but for timely assistance would have been destroyed.

A large two story slate roofed brick veneered dwelling is taking the place of the one recently destroyed by fire on Samuel Jones' farm, in Franklin township.

J. B. Boyle is going right on in the practice of his profession, and has a very comfortable place of business. Glad to see him prospering.

W. L. Meese, of Auburn, was in town Friday in the interest of the Searight dampers, which he is now engaged in pushing in various parts of the country.

Morse & Burley our new grocery firm, are filling up the McMorgan building with choice groceries. They are evidently enterprising business men, and will succeed.

Prof. Sanders was absent a part of last week visiting the different graded schools of this county, with the view to make himself more familiar with the work in his chosen profession.

C. J. Coats, is getting quite a reputation, as well as a good deal of business in they way of selling real estate. As a great deal of property is now changing hands here, it must be a paying business.

Miss Ida Carpender, is we believe, the veteran postmistress of this county, and the fact that she has been continued in the position here so long, shows that her ability to fill the place is appreciated.

E. C. and Date Miller are as busy as ever wrapping up groceries, and making themselves agreeable to the people, around them. No matter how many changes are made in the business firms around them, they are still at their post.

Martin Hook, formerly trustee of Franklin township, still suffers seriously from injuries received last July, by the running away of his team, We believe he has never been able to get off his farm since.

E. T. Brysland, deals out the cash, in the bank here, with the skill of an experienced hand. His education and turn of mind fit him for this business, and we are glad to see him in what we hope will be a permanent position, and equally satisfactory to him and to the proprietors of the bank.

M. E. Griswold was in town last week. He is interested in a new kind of governor for steam engines and expects those who own the patent, to make arrangements soon for a location where they can be manufactured. Morell Bros. of Auburn, recently made one of these governors, for Duncan Bros. in Waterloo, where it can now be seen in operation.

H. E. Chilcoat the proprietor of the Parlor Restaurant east of the postoffice, has fitted up his establishment in tasty style. In his usual spirit of liberality he has devoted a part of the front to a display of ores, minerals, fossils and other objects of scientific interest. A part of these he collected while in the far west, and among them, are some rare specimens. It will pay any one with a taste for the rare and the beautiful in nature to devote a spare hour or two to an examination of his collection.

Mrs. John Phillips living three miles northwest of Butler, was found dead in her bed last Friday morning. She slept with her daughter. Her husband called her at about 5:30 in the morning receiving no reply, he carried a light in the room and discovered that she had been dead some time. So peaceful and quietly had been her departure that her daughter knew nothing of the sad affair. She was buried on Sunday. She was very much esteemed by all who knew her. Her husband and children have the sympathy of all the neighbors and friends.

Sam Beck will go to New York about the 16th of December with another car load of ducks and geese.

Leo Mergy was home over Sunday. He is firing on the B. & O. with headquarters at Garrett, and likes his job.

Will Baxter is taking a lay off. He tried to run his hand through the job press. He got too much impression on his thumb.

H. E. Braun is the boss sausage cutter, and no one need be afraid to eat anything he prepares. His meat is chopped so fine you do not need to chew it.

We see by the papers that Dr. H. Ruth, formerly of Hudson, but now of Kendallville, was married last week at Albion, to Miss Flora Crossley, of Corunna.

Wilson Shull and Elkiah Zerkel have bought out the grocery of G. S. Shaffer, in the Citizens' Bank building and will continue the business in the same room.

R. B. Crane, of Toledo, and an elder brother from Nokomis, Ill., have been paying a visit to their brother, Geo. M. Crane. The elder brother is a correspondent for some of the Chicago dailies.

J. B Taylor was at home over Sunday. He is now working at the carpenter business at South Chicago. He is looking much better than when last we saw him, and feels as joyful over the election as the rest of us.

Hiram Leib swore off chewing tobacco the other day, and had his tobacco box thoroughly "repaired and revovated," as hotel men say, and will hereafter use it for a match box. But he never goes back on a good story.

J. D. McAnally has sold his residence and lots to the railroad company for $1,800. This will give room for their new buildings and side tracks. Mr. McAnally expects to go into the manufacture of his patent harness attachments at an early date, either here or elsewhere.

"Prof." Washburn is most likely a dead beat. He "skipped" his hotel bill any way. He was at the institute a short time, and made a nice little talk to the teachers. In fact he "pulled the wool" over the county superintendent and all concerned. Mr. Butt, however, is the only man who loses any cash by him, as far as we have learned.

Thomas Segner died quite suddenly, at his home here last Thursday afternoon, He had been ailing some of late, but had been down town in the forenoon. After dinner, he complained of not feeling well, and Mrs. Segner went into the other room to get some medicine for him, and returning, found him lying on the floor. He lived but a short time. The funeral took place Saturday.

John Butt, celebrated the 42nd anniversary of his wedding Thursday. Nov. 16. We believe he was married in the city of London, and from there came into this county when it was a wilderness. It was a strange change, but he and his amiable lady have lived to see the county become a thickly settled community, and himself one of its most honored citizens. May they enjoy many returns of the happy day.

Rev. E. M. Baker, brother of Joseph S. Baker, of this place, has been for a long time confined to his bed at Jonesboro, in this state. He was taken sick immediately after his son's death at Pendleton, and has ever since been confined to his bed with a low grade of typhoid fever. He attempted to resign his charge as minister at that place, but his flock would not hear to anything of the kind, insisting that his salary should be paid him whether he preached or not. He is now convalescing, we are glad to hear.—[Indianian.

A Good Race.

Although Judge McBride won the judicial race and ran ahead of his state ticket 93 in Waterloo and Smithfield, he ran behind his state ticket in the balance of the county 32. Yet Mr. Dills and his friends feel gratified to know that with the exception of Waterloo and Smithfield he ran ahead of state ticket. And further, that the total number of votes cast in the three counties for Myers, the democratic candidate for secretary of state, was 6,310. Mr. Dills' total vote was 6,307, or only 3 less than the state ticket.

COMMISSIONER' SALE.

STATE OF INDIANA, } ss.
DEKALB COUNTY, }
In DeKalb Circuit Court, September term 1882:
Rachel Beatty,
vs. } Partition.
Abraham Beatty, et al

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned commissioner, appointed by the DeKalb Circuit Court, at its September session, A. D. 1882, in the above entitled cause, to sell the real estate hereinafter described, at private sale, will sell at private sale, the following premises situate in DeKalb county, in the state of Indiana, to-wit:

The north half of the southeast quarter and the south half of the south half of the northeast quarter, all in section thirty three (33) township number thirty-three (33) north of range thirteen (13) east, containing one hundred and twenty acres of land, more or less.

Proposals for the purchase of said premises will be received by me at my office in the town of Auburn in DeKalb county, state of Indiana, from December 8th, A. D., 1882, until December 18th, A. D. 1882, at 12 o'clock M., of said day, at which time said premises will be sold to the person having made the highest and best offer therefor, provided said offer be equal in amount to the appraised value of said premises.

TERMS OF SALE:—One-third cash; one-third in nine months and one-third in eighteen months from the day of sale. The deferred payments to draw interest at six per cent from the day of sale, and secured to the satisfaction of said commissioner.

Nov. 6, 1882. JAMES E. ROSE, Commissioner.

Notice of Appropriation Under the Railroad Act.

STATE OF INDIANA, } ss
DEKALB COUNTY, }
In the DeKalb Circuit Court—
The Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway
vs.
William D. Boyle and Alma Boyle, his wife, Thomas Blackwell and Warner Blackwell, William Williams and Matilda Koontz Williams, his wife, Mary Jane Hixon

Be it remembered that on the 21st day of November, 1882, the above named plaintiff, the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific Railway, by Charles B. Stuart, W. V. Stuart and James E. Rose, its attorneys, filed in the office of the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court its instrument of appropriation in writing, in pursuance of an act of the General Assembly of the state of Indiana entitled, "An Act for the Incorporation of Railroad Companies, approved May 11th, 1852," against said William D. Boyle, Alma Boyle, his wife, Thomas Blackwell and Warner Blackwell, William Williams and Matilda Koontz Williams, his wife, and Mary Jane Hixon; and also the affidavit of a competent person that said defendants, William Williams and Matilda Koontz Williams, are non-residents of the State of Indiana. Said instrument of appropriation gives notice to said defendants and to all persons claiming any right, title or interest in or to the property hereinafter described, of its intention to appropriate the lands and water running thereon, and the rights and interests therein, hereinafter described, to-wit:

A strip of land two hundred and seventy (270) feet wide off of the south end of the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of Section 10, Township 34 north, range 14 east, containing eight and sixteen one hundredths (8.16) acres more or less. Also a part of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of Section 10, Township 34 north, range 14 east, to wit: Beginning at a Stake in the line north and south through the center of Section 10, one hundred and thirty (130) feet south of the center of said section; thence west four hundred and seventy-nine (479) feet to the line between William H. Madden and William D. Boyle; thence south along said line six hundred and ninety (690) feet to the corner of the land of William H. Madden and Adam Smith in William D. Boyle's line; thence east four hundred and seventy-nine (479) feet, to the line north and south through the center of Section 10; thence north along said line six hundred and ninety (690) feet to the beginning, containing seven and fifty-nine hundredths (7.59) acres more or less, being a part of Section 10, Township 34 north, range 14 east, in said County of DeKalb, State of Indiana.

Said real estate so described is necessary for said railroad company, for the purpose of a water station, side tracks and depot grounds. And plaintiff also filed with said instrument of appropriation in said clerk's office a plat and outline of the property above described.

And said railway, not having agreed with the owners for the purchase of said property, has taken this course in accordance with the provisions of said act hereinbefore mentioned. Said non-resident defendants are also notified that on Thursday, the 21st day of December, 1882, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, the said Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific railway will apply to the Hon. H. W. McBride, Judge of the DeKalb Circuit Court, at the court-house in Auburn, DeKalb County, State of Indiana, for the appointment of appraisers to assess the damages which said defendants and all other persons claiming any right title or interest in or to said real estate, will sustain by the appropriation of the property above described for the purposes within stated.

Witness my hand and the seal of said court, affixed at Auburn, DeKalb County, State of Indiana, on the 21st day of November, 1882.

[SEAL.] JOHN W. BAXTER, Clerk.

—Turkey,

—Oysters

—And chicken.

—Thanksgiving

—Dinner and supper

—At the Presbyterian church.

—The ladies will give you a nice meal.

—Dinner 35c.; supper 25c. Don't forget it.

—Charley Groscop labors at the Cabin.

—Sam Beck, Waterloo, buys live poultry.

—All the dance clubs have a hop this week.

—Edward Orr, of Corunna, was in town Saturday.

—Remember the dinner at the Presbyterian church.

—Fred. Davis is at home this week for a short visit.

—Have you seen Uncle Tom. Cool astride "dat dar black hoss?"

—The Auburn House has a string band which amuses the guests.

—Remember the Thanksgiving dinner at the Presbyterian church.

—A. W. Bair, of Fairfield, spent a few hours in Auburn Saturday.

—Rev. McCord will deliver the sermon at the Baptist church to-day.

—Rainier & Headley will hereafter keep D. D. Mallory's best oysters.

—A new fence has been built around the grounds occupied by the Eagle Mills.

—Almost six inches of snow fell Sunday morning, and everything looked wintry.

—Billy Stimely has come home and is enjoying himself among his former comrades.

—Good, live poultry—ducks, geese, chickens, turkeys—wanted at Waterloo. See Sam Beck.

—The new officers seem to feel very much at home in their offices, especially L. J. Miller.

—Mrs. Irvin Scott has been visiting friends at Alliance, Ohio, for the past two or three weeks.

—Work is being pushed on McNabb's stave factory at the Junction, and soon all will be as of yore.

—Mrs. J. McGonigle, of Pierceton, is in town visiting in the family of her brother-in-law, G. A. Porter.

—Deputy surveyor Scholes, of Fort Wayne, was in this place Monday in the interests of his business.

—The sleigh-bells jingled merrily Sunday and Monday, and everything put on the appearance of winter.

—Thanksgiving dinner at the Presbyterian church immediately after the close of public services at the Baptist church.

—Frank Zimmerman went to Indianapolis last week to attend the annual meeting of the Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows at that place.

NOTICE.—The postoffice in Auburn will be closed from 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 p. m. on Thanksgiving day, as allowed by law. G. W. GORDON, P. M.

—It looks as though our teamsters were a little cruel having dumb brutes draw heavily loaded sleighs on the thin snow that fell the first of the week.

—Albion Review: Elza Shaffer received by mail to day a very handsome cigar case as a birthday gift. We are informed it was a present from his girl in Waterloo.

—Mrs. L. V. Rush was in town last week visiting relatives. We see by the Fort Wayne papers that she is assisting in the Gazette office, and as a special reporter on that paper.

—Help the ladies of the Presbyterian church by attending the dinner and supper and eating some Thanksgiving turkey and chicken. Dinner 35 cents; supper 25 cents. For children it is 25 and 15 cents.

MARRIED.—At the Reform church parsonage, in Waterloo, Nov. 23d, 1882, by Rev. F. F. Christine, Mr. Freeman W. Hamman to Miss Lydia Beck, both of Franklin township, DeKalb county, Indiana.

—Dr. J. W. Squires, of Churubusco, called on us Monday on his way to his former home in Corunna. He is working into a fine practice in his present home, and is feeling well satisfied with his prospects.

—Frank Brink is reported to be getting along nicely this week. His friends entertain strong hopes that he will soon be able to be about once more and return to the practice of law at his new home in Churubusco.

—In our report of the institute last week we omitted the name of Miss Rosa Blair from the list of those who sang in Miss Vineyard's entertainment. Of course the omission was not intentional, but we hasten to apologize for the mistake.

—By a recent letter from Mrs. A. L. Lamport, now in Mishawaka, we learn with regret that Mr. Lamport has been in poor health for some time. Mrs. Lamport has been offered a position in the public schools there and will probably accept it.

"Men of the Hour."

—Sheriff Leas had a happy handshaking with his friends just before he made his departure for his home at Waterloo. Many of our citizens regret the removal of Mr. Leas and his family and the best wishes and kindest feelings go with them from the COURIER and our townspeople alike.

—T. D. Gross has sold the Cabin and is taking the world easy as time goes by. Tom. has been engaged in a number of different business transactions and has never yet said fail. He was one of the main contractors in building the Saginaw road and with Mr. W. H. Dills laid out the western addition to the town.

—Albert Robbins, ex-auditor leaves his position with much credit to himself and satisfaction to his party. Although Mr. Robbins differs with us politically we cheerfully acknowledge him to be a faithful public servant and a good, honest citizen. The COURIER wishes him success in whatever occupation he may engage.

—S. B. Tarney, esq., the pioneer butcher of this place, has sold his market and will for the present "lay back on his oars." Sim. has accumulated considerable money selling "bones and sich" to the tired and hungry. He was extremely peculiar in his manner of life, having but little to say to his gentlemen customers and employed a special waiter for those of the other gender—yet one and all acknowledge him to be a fine fellow and wish him well.

—Joseph Girardot, who was one of the founders of the stave factory at this place, has entirely withdrawn. He has discharged the management of that large institution with more than ordinary ability and the business has increased wonderfully from year to year under his careful judgment. We bespeak for Joe, a bright and happy future, and the COURIER with his many friends hopes that after he "climes the golden stairs" his good deeds on earth will be fully rewarded.

—G. C. Ralston, who has spent the summer in Montana, returned last week, looking as sound as a dollar and every inch a mountaineer. He spent a good part of his time in the valley of the Yellowstone, which he thinks is not just the paradise which western papers would have us believe. As to some of the other portions of the west, he takes a more encouraging view. Some of it is very desirable, and under the impulse given it by the extension of the Northern Pacific road, the settlements are rapidly expanding. Mr. Ralston expects to remain here during the winter and may return to the distant northwest in the spring.

—One of Mr. Groscop's boys, living north of town two miles, was accidently shot by another boy while hunting rabbits. One of the frisky little animals ran into the arch of a brick kiln. Young Groscop kept watch at one end of the arch while the other boy, a son of Calvin Kutzner, went to the other end to shoot it. When he fired through the arch the shot struck Groscop inflicting painful but not dangerous injuries.

—Angola Herald: Miss Lora Walter, who has held cases in the Herald office for the past few weeks, and proves herself a very efficient compositor, will leave to-morrow for Auburn, where she will visit her sister, Mrs. Penfield, and return in a few days to her home in Bucyrus, Ohio, where she will resume her old position in the Forum office. She made many warm friends here, and the good wishes of all follow her.

—B. M. Holman, who has for a year or more been carrying on a successful advertising agency in Fort Wayne, will remove to New York City about Jan. 1, and will, we learn, continue the business under more favorable auspices in that city. Mr. Holman has worked up quite a business in Fort Wayne, and by his ability and strictly upright dealing has won the good will of the printing fraternity around him.

—Fort Wayne District Conference will be held in the M. E. church of Auburn next week, beginning on Monday evening and closing on Wednesday evening. In addition to the regular business, the exercises will consist of addresses, essays and sermons. The meetings, day and evening, are open to the public, and a cordial invitation is extended to all.

—We are under obligations to Theo Reed for late Dakota papers. They are full of the vim and boom of the far northwest where towns spring up like mushrooms, and sometimes wither about as rapidly. Mr. Reed, however, seems to have unbounded faith in the country. It is a great country certainly, for every one is charmed with it that goes there.

—On election day an Elkhart county man voted his road receipt by mistake, in place of his party ticket. This is only equaled by the man in Vermont who voted his butter bill.—[Butler Record.

And you might add to the list the man in Waterloo who voted his post-office receipt two years ago.

Old and young, male or female, find a sure cure for all nervous affections in Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment. A cure guaranteed. Sold at F. E. Davenport's.

—Give thanks to-day.

—Go to church to-day.

—Did you ride a sleigh?

—Pull down the awnings.

—Corn is selling at 35 cents.

—Advertise the holiday goods.

—Elza Shaffer is visiting in Ohio.

—The town is swarming with book agents.

—Hunters are after the rabbit in big squads.

—The livery horses are kept busy at present.

—The school boys are thankful for this day.

—The attendance at school is said to be large.

—Mrs. C. Hare's property is being repaired.

—There will be lots of gobblers "gobbled" to-day.

—Shooting and raffling matches are now the rage.

—The juvenile uses the sidewalks for skating rinks.

—Lots of the b'hoys are thankful to-day—for sleighing.

—Mr. Rhodenbaugh has been numbered among the sick.

—Squaw winter and the shoemaker are reaping his harvest.

—Dick Elson broke the track for sleighs Sunday morning.

—Mrs. Al. Markle is in town visiting her parents and relatives.

—L. J. Miller, esq., occupies the Case property as his residence.

—Jack Ralston's new delivery horse is a "flyer" beyond description.

—Frank Borst, of Corunna, will act as deputy under treasurer Miller.

—J. C. Loveland, son and sister, of Corunna, were in town Tuesday.

—Kin. Lanning carries the mail between this place and Mooresville.

—Does every drunken umbrella repairer use this place to sober off?

—Clean the snow from the sidewalks and have some style about yourself.

—Oysters by the can and in bulk at Rainier & Headley's. Give them a call.

—While Erv Scott is away from home Tommy Cool manages the dray line.

—Miss Clara Hults, of Plymouth, O., is visiting the Ralston families in this place.

—Teams can now pass over the new bridge that spans the creek on Seventh street.

—Charles Kelley, of Waterloo, is the second man to pay his subscription up to 1884.

—Mrs. Frank Zimmerman returned last week from her visit to relatives in Butler.

—Billy Little has shut up his shoe shop here and will probably locate at Corunna.

—The new butcher shop, at the south end of Main street, has begun to dress the bovine.

—The republicans talk of running Lafe Miller for vice-president—so rumore has it.

—Now the school boy runs and jams against the pedestrain who cannot dodge him.

—John Kruger is buying poultry, making black salts and running a wood-yard.

—Miss Carrie Espy was in town over Sunday, visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Espy.

—More of the beautiful fell yesterday making the sleighing splendid and livery men happy.

—Dr. Swarts has covered the foundation walls of his new building so as to make it secure for winter.

—Will the town authorities pass over the sidewalk, on a dark evening, in front of the Knorr property.

—The brick masons have laid away their trowels and will seek other employment during the winter months.

—The new wagon manufactory will soon be in operation and furnish employment to a number of mechanics.

—At the shooting on the Groscop farm, Tuesday, the Auburn nimrods brought home thirty-six turkeys out of fifty.

—Miss Lora Walters is again at home after quite a stay at Angola, where she was connected with the Herald office.

—The merchant's mind is busy now studying whether the fellow who wants to stand him off for an over-coat is "solid" or not.

—Our readers will please forgive us, as it will never do to let the season pass without saying that the "squeal of the porker is heard in land."

—Thieves entered Schaab & Bangnot's store last week but took away nothing except some small change that was in the money drawer.

—Dr. J. A. Cowan, assisted by a physician from Fremont, Ohio, operated upon F. A. Brink's ankle and removed a number of small pieces of bone.

—Sam Beck, at Waterloo, buys all the live ducks, turkeys, chickens and geese he can get. He will pay the highest price the market will allow.

—Mrs. C. Hare, of Grand Haven, Mich., has been visiting friends in town for the past few days.

Searight Drum Dampers.

We are now using one of Searight's Drum Dampers and find it a grand success. It will save, in our office, about one-third the fuel generally used. This will amount to more than double its cost by spring. As wood is not as plenty as it was a few years ago, it will pay us to begin to save it. So every one is beginning to think, too, judging from the number who are buying these heaters. Mr. Meese, the agent, is putting them into many of the business houses, and private dwellings in town and also into a great many dwellings in the country. Farmers themselves are beginning to think of saving fuel, as well as people in town. Mr. Meese is kept busy all the time, and is even now forty or fifty behind in his orders. When you call in at the COURIER office you can see how it works. Not being in the business, "we make no charge for showing goods," and you can warm yourselves by it as long as you please.

—J. L. Davis' horse run away from Chris. Baldock, on Seventh street, a few days ago. The animal broke the thills of the vehicle and caused Mike Hebel to make a fine spring-board leap.

—Here is the dance programme for the next three rounds: "The Jolly Seven" Tuesday evening, the "Joi De Vie" Thursday evening and the "Old Neoterio" next week Tuesday evening.

—John McClellan and his better-half have come to the conclusion that it is not best to dwell in unity together and have made a division of the household and kitchen furniture, farming utensils, etc.

—Henry Wolf, the court house janitor, has straightened the yard gate and placed it upon its hinges. That's all right so far. But Henry did'nt clean the snow off the walks and pedestrians are howling loudly after this Wolf.

—A recent letter from our young friend E. J. McOscar, now studying medicine in Philadelphia, shows him to be prospering finely in his studies, and also sound in the democratic faith. He would have enjoyed a visit in old DeKalb just after the election.

—Lawyers Penfield and Moody went beyond the bounds of Blackstone while trying a local suit, last week, and began to decide their arguments with their muscles. Justice Walborn had them settle the matter for $25.00 each and the original case went to the jury.

—Mince meat, nice and clean and well seasoned at Rainier & Headley's.

The Judge-Advocate-General has decided that the failure of army officers to pay their debts is not in violation of the 61st article of war, and will not sustain the charges of "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman."

The movement to raise $50,000 for the Garfield monument by the contributions from the State Encampments of Knights Templar, equivalent to $1 from each Knight in the jurisdiction, is said to be meeting with gratifying success.

The change proposed by the new naturalization treaty with Germany, extends the provisions of the Bancroft treaty over the territory of Alsace and Lorraine, and some other portions of the German empire acquired since the Bancroft treaty.

The late Joseph J. Cook, of Providence, R. I., who left an estate of $2,000,000, cut off a deformed daughter with $600 per year, but a prospect of vigorous litigation caused a compromise, in which the unfortunate girl will obtain her rights.

In the reformed civil service of the future the offices of the national government will not be considered a perquisite of the appointing or recommending power, and all appointees will have a fixed and certain tenure in office, subject only to their qualifications and conduct.

The Garfield fair has been projected on so large a scale and at so great an expense, that unless Congress grants permission to continue it a week after the December session opens it will be a failure. But little interest is taken outside of Washington, and that city has just been ravished by two fairs.

Supervising special agent Marvin of the customs service, says that smuggling is confined to narrow limits, the boldest operations being transacted on the Pacific coast. Opium smuggling is carried on by an organized company, which includes capitalists, custom house employes, steamship employes, local politicians and Chinamen.

Alvin Hawkins, the present Republican Governor of Tennessee, who who was defeated for re-election, has eight brothers in Tennessee, all of whem voted against him at the election.

It is said there have been 4,000 cases and 1,500 deaths from small-pox in Cincinnati since August 24, information of which has been suppressed, and that with cold weather the scourge will become epidemic.

Harrison, the boy preacher, has been holding revival meetings at Grand Rapids, Michigan, for several weeks. Three persons have been driven to insanity by the excitement, the latest victim being Miss Emmons, a dressmaker.

Governor-elect Pattison, of Pennsylvania, will not be 32 years of age until December next, and hence stands in no danger of being struck by Presidential rightning, as he will not have reached 35 years of age, the constitutional requisite, in 1884.

During the five years 1877-81, the average loss by fire in the United States and Canada in the month of September alone was $6,950,000. This year, omitting the fires in which the loss was less than $10,000, the record shows 123 in number, and the aggregate loss $6,205,000.

The Supreme Court has decided that the act making it a misdemeanor for an office holder to solicit or receive contributions from office holders, unless appointed to do so by the advice and consent of the Senate, is legal and binding. This decision was rendered in the noted in the case of Gen. Curtis.

As it is not not possible or desirable to deny a man's right to vote as he pleases, the wise policy of a party manifestly is to make him pleased to vote with such party; and it is equally evident that party support can be most certainly secured and retained by deserving it. The coercion of the party lash is a played out influence in these days of intelligent independence and educated liberality.

Returns of the recent election in New York, nearly all official, show a total vote of 906,597. The total vote for President in 1880 was 1,105,226. Cleveland's majority is 193,991. His total vote is 536,294. That for Hancock in 1880 was 534,511; for Garfield 555,544. Folger's vote for Governor, this year is 342,303, or a falling off of 220,-518 votes from the number he received in 1880 for Chief Judge.

A Washington special says: "The probability is that the Secretary of War will recommend to Congress that no river and harber bill be passed this session. Appropriations for the river and harbor work are good for all time. When the last river and harbor bill was passed there were four million dollars on hand. At the end of the present year there will be eight or nine millions—enough for next year.

The committee appointed to discover what has become of the Irish skirmishing fund reports that by the tricky removal of safeguards the fund came practically under the control of two of the trustees, who have squandered $60,344,21, the principal items being $36,390,70 expended on two impracticable rams, and $17,000 spent in an unsuccessful attempt to get control of the Dublin Irishman.

The balance of trade in favor of the United States during the first nine months of 1881 was $121,142,104, and the balance against us during the first nine months of the present year is $54,309,644. During October the imports at New York were over $11,000,000 in excess of the exports. For a year of plenty this is not a good showing, and its only explanation is extravagance in the purchase of foreign luxuries.

Among the congratulatory messages received by Governor-elect Butler, of Massachusetts, was one from some of his one-time foemen in Memphis, Tenn., worded in this wise: "General B. F. Butler: Glory to God in the highest! We don't believe, now, that you stole any spoons at all! But if you did, keep 'em. We wouldn't have you to trouble yourself about returning them; not for anything in the world."

The Committee of the National Academy of Sciences at Washington, which was requested to make a report upon the scientific and economic relations of the sorghum sugar industry, has made its report, and it will appear in the forthcoming agricultural report The committee confirmed the fact that sugar exists in the juices of sorghum and maize, and that the sorghum yields in juice, when taken at the proper state of developement, about as much sugar as the best cane of the tropical regions. The recommendations in the report when printed cannot fail to be of great interest to the agricultural community.

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has rendered a decision in favor of the Standard Oil Company of Ohio, which ends the long litigation between the commonwealth and the company concerning taxes and penalties. Over $700,000 is claimed to be due the State by the company.

A package consighed to Louis Strasburger & Co New., York, sapposed to contain $80,000 worth of diamonds, which arrived by the steamer City of Chester, upon being opened disclosed nothing but tufts of paper. The purser of the steamer claims to have received the package in the condition in which it was deliveped to the Custom House authorities.

A meeting of the Irish National League was held at Tullagh 10,000 persons being present. Sullivan and O'Kelly, members of Parliment, were the principal speakers. O'Kelly intimated that Davitt was endeavoring to dismember the Irish party, and was virtually stabbing the country in the back. He would resign his seat in parliament, he said, if the people wavered in their allegience to Parnell.

Chief Brooks, of the Government detective service, has received a sample of the counterfeit standard silver dollar which is being extensively circulated, especially in the West. The coin is very heavily plated, resists acid tests unless deeply cut before applied, has a ring similiar to the genuine, and is of the exact weight. The officers of the department consider the counterfeit one of the most dangerous that has yet appeared.

When the supply of coal gets short elsewhere, the world can turn to China for "black diamonds." Baron Richthofen shows that in that country the supply of antharacite coal is not less than 630,000,000,000 of tons, and the bituminous coal supply is just as large. The Baron thinks that, taking what is left in other parts of the world with the Chinese area, we need not fear a fuel famine. He thinks that the supply in the Chinese province of Shansi alone will last the world about 4.200 years.

Henry Ward Beecher in a recent sermon swings to orthodox views and says: "No advance of scientific thought will ever set aside revivals of religion, which are currents into which men can go and be borne on to something nobler and better. Anything is better than apathetic unbelief. I believe from the bottom of my soul in revivals of religion. It is said that we are coming into a scientific period which which will take the place of religion, but I think there never was a time when the churches were in a more hopeful state than they are to-day, and I don't think that true religion is in any danger.

Commissioner Green B. Raum, of the United States Internal Revenue Bureau of the Treasury Department, in his annual report for the fiscal year, says there have been but few violations of the revenue laws during the last year, which is not only creditable to the system of safe-guards by which the interests of the Government are protected, but speaks well for the honesty of those engaged in the liquor and tobacco business. A striking evidence of the efficiency of the Revenue Stamp Division employes under Mr. Raum is found in the report of a commission appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, at the request of the Commissioner, to examine the accounts from October 25, 1877, to July, 1882. In that time the enormous number of 2,558,000,000 stamps were received, of which 2,381,000,000 were sold, the value of which was $668,000,000. Not a stamp was lost, and everything was accounted for to the exact cent. This is remarkable, considering the fact that these stamps are forwarded through the mails in the ordinary manner, and have to pass through so many hands. Two sets of books were kept, which balanced with those of the Fifth Auditor, the First Comptroller and other Treasury officials.

NEW YORK.

The trial suit of Wilkinson vs Henry Ward Beecher, for breach of contract for failing to complete the "Life of Christ," was resumed Monday morning. Beecher was called to the stand. He d'd not remember in 1878 having received, signed or read the paper shown him; nor did he recollect having heard or read a modified copy o it, and he did not believe any demand for copy was made since 1876. He knew they wanted copy, and they couldn't get it. He understood copy was to be furnished them, but there was no limitation of time. He had repeated conversations with Ford & Co., as to the expediency of issuing the book in 1874, when Plymouth Church was invaded and persecuted by various councils (Referring to the Congregational council.) The gentlemen of the firm were entirely in accordance with me as to the impossibility of putting out a second volume of the "Life of Christ" The counsel for the plaintiff then declared his case closed, and Shearman renewed his motion to dismiss the case upon grounds already published.

Judge Barrett granted the motion to dismiss In moving for an extra allowance of $1,500 to the defense, Shearman said the real facts in the case were that when the work was suspended the firm had some 10,000 copies on hand, and there was no evidence to show that these cost them 1 cent. Instead of losing money, the firm had made a clear gain of $17,000. Judge Barrett made an order allowing Beecher $250 extra allowance.

The owners of the property were notified of the discoveries. There is a great demand for bricks and other relics of the ancient structure.

WASHINGTON.

In the Jeannette court Tuesday morning Engineer Melville continued his account of the search for DeLong and party The narrative was very pathetic, and the speaker told the story in a straight-forward manner. He gave details of the discovery of the party frozen to death on the banks of the Lena. The attention of the searchers was first attracted by hut poles sticking out of the snow Upon seeing these, the party advanced a few steps, when they saw a hand reaching out of the snow, which afterwards proved to be DeLong's The rest of the party then discovered the remains of a fire near them and evidences that the unfortunate men had been trying to remove their effects, with supposed view of reaching the banks of the river. Melville said they, evidently recognised the fact that if they died near the bank of the river their bodies would be carried away by the flood. Melville examined DeLong's journal, found near where the body lay.

The bodies were all frozen to the ground, but as soon as discovered were pried up, rolled together, and covered with tent cloth. It was found when Ambler's body was turned over that he clutched DeLong's pistol. From this Melville drew the inference that DeLong died before Ambler, and that the latter had taken the pistol to keep off animals. Melville gave directions to have DeLong's body taken out of the snow and placed in a hut near by. He also directed that the remaining bodies be very carefully preserved, and any article found on their persons.

According to some private letters which have been received from members of the Mississippi River Commission, it is quite evident that a majority of the Commission will not be disposed to recommend that any future appropriations be granted for the improvement of the rives under the present system, and that they think that the engineer officers in charge have been unnecessarily extravagant in their comprehensive system of improvements, It is certain from this private information that there will be two reports from the committee, and probably that the minority report will be signed only by Ellis, of Louisiana, and Thomas, of Illinois.

The River's Secret.

Chicago dispatch:

About seven o'clock Tuesday morning a man was found floating in the river at the foot of LaSalle Avenue with a hole in the forehead, supposed to have been caused by a bullet The man was about 30 years of age The hair on the head is dark, and the mustache is sandy The first joint of the forefinger of the right hand is missing The clothes are of a blue tint and the boots buttoned gaiters Upon the body, which had been in the water a week, perhaps, nothing was found to identify the remains. The police conveyed it to the morgue,

The scene of the ghastly find is one that a person of prudence would avoid even in the twilight It is a very, very lonesome spot, where every object looks weird when the great city is sitting in the shadows Entering the tunnel on LaSalle avenue after nightfall is very much like descending into the catacombs of Rome unprovided with a guide The echo of a traveler's foot-step in the dismal passageway seems to warn him to get out as soon as possible Not a stone's throw away is the "Sailor's Row," on Kinzie street, which, in times gone by has so often furnished items of criminal interest for the police and night reporters. Of late very little crime has been unearthed in the vicinity, the savage knife and hammer duel between two Danish sailors there about two years ago inspiring increased vigilance on the part of the police in the locality.

Lieutenant Shea, in charge of the detectives at the Central Station, detailed on the case Tuesday morning officers Roban and Stift, whose speciality for years has been North Side service. If they use the industry they exercised in the apprehension of Tracy, hanged for the murder of officer Huebner, the fate of the unknown man found this morning will soon lose its mysterious character.

The Tiger Fight in Java.

Yesterday took place the announced clearance among the tigers belonging to his highness the sultan, in order to make room for a fresh supply when the new tiger pens will be built. At about 10 a. m. the sultan, the resident military commander, assistant resident, and other spectators appeared behind the kraton and seated themselves in a grand stand constructed for the purpose. Thousands of Javanese flocked to the spot to see the combats. Soon a fight between a royal tiger and a buffalo together in a pen commenced. The tiger was several times tossed into the air and then gored to death by the buffalo, which had been made furious as possible by peppered water, burning nettles, and red-hot iron bars. This combat lasted two hours. Afterward began the rampokan or tiger fight. On the plain alongside the karton stood Javanese, armed with stout spears, fifteen to eighteen feet long, drawn up in rows of one behind the other, forming altogether an extraordinary large square. The two foremost rows lay kneeling, the two hindmost stood erect. In the center of this open space were thirteen straw-roofed, wooden pens, in each of which was a tiger. At a given signal a musical instrument called the gamelan begins playing a martial air to slow measure. Three tiger-keepers then step out of the ranks and approach the cage. Two of them bear each a burning torch, with which they set fire to the straw. The tiger, frightened by the shower of sparks, is then forced out into the open space, but knows not whither to turn. It runs round and seeks whether it can find an outlet, until it endeavors either by a desperate spring to get away over the human wall which keeps it inclosed or tries to creep through underneath; but it falls, pierced with the many spears which have struck it. It utters a savage cry, which is drowned by the applause and shouts of the multitude. In silent agony it strikes around furiously with its mighty paws. The shafts of the spears often break like glass. In such cases a single blow might cost the life of any unfortunate within reach of its claws. It is afterward killed in due form. This scene took place in the same way thirteen times in successively with as many tigers, the festivity closing at 2 p. m. Only a few accidents occurred. One soldier, by ill-luck, received a spear thrust when combating with a tiger, and was severely wounded in the leg. A native received a bite when one of the tigers broke through the square and was killed outside it, after causing great commotion among the spectators.—Java Bode.

The Spiral Stud.

Burlington Hawkeye.

We see that there is a new shirt stud invented, which goes through the gimlet-hole in a shirt-bosom in sections, and snaps together, leaving the under side smooth, so that there is no raw selvage to stick into a man's vital parts, the way there is in the old spiral stud, and we look forward to the happy future when we can buy a set of the new studs and give the old spiral studs to the poor, who have no feelings to be lacerated. We have thought for many years that the Government ought to call in the old spiral shirt studs and issue a new kind with coupons that will go together with a snap; but nobody has seemed to think the Government had ought to take the responsibility.

For a hundred years the spiral shirt stud that screws in has held the stomach of a man in its grasp, and has made sore spots on him, when all should be sunshine and so forth. It is said that women share our joys and our sorrows. That may be so to a certain extent, and they may suffer some, but they don't know anything about the horrors of the spiral shirt stud.

No man can be cheerful, full of fun and frivolity, and keep a company in a roar of laughter, when he is constantly reminded that three golden cork-screws are gently but firmly entering his body from three different places; that three different shows are getting in their work under one canvas at one price of admission. It is asking too much to expect a man to be entertaining when three artesian wells are being sunk in his person at once. Women do not mean to be cruel, and to cause unnecessary pains to man, but if they knew how they send the quivering arrows to his very soul, in three places, they would be careful how they threw their heads on men's shirt-bosoms, and root around to find an easy place to lay. No doubt many of our hearers have noticed that men shrink from them when they lay their little darling heads on his breast, and have thought the man was shocked at their actions. It is not that. It is the spiral shirt-stud. Of course a man will stand a good deal, and not complain under such circumstances, but if the woman in the case, or on the shirt-bosom rather, will look up into his fond eyes she will find there, beside a look of satisfaction, and don't-get-up-on-my-account expression, a far away, penetrating look as though his soul was on fire, or he had been eating cucumbers.

Woman can have have no idea of the sacrifice man makes, in such cases, and they should not be surprised if he faints away. Other things in the world may cease, but the boring of the spiral stud never ceases.

Checkmating the Prince of Wales.

Speaking of the notoriety which the pronunciamento of the prince of Wales, regarding her beauty, has won for Mrs. Langtry, the New York correspondent of the Philadelphia Record says: "If Mr. Langtry had done as one of his countrymen similarly provoked did he would have have saved himself many bitter moments. This man I speak of was married to a very pretty American woman. The prince of Wales met her, called her a beauty, and asked for an introduction, which, under the circumstances could not be refused. He had a pleasant chat with her, and requested the privilege of calling at her house at a certain time. The request was granted, but the husband, knowing what it meant—that his wife would soon be enrolled in the in the ranks of professional beauties—prepared himself for the attack. He could not refuse his prince, but he must do something to prevent the horrible consequences. He said nothing, but he thought out a plan. The hour and the prince arrived, and to the extreme annoyance of his royal highness he found a canopy stretched across the street and a large assemblage inside awaiting his arrival. The band played and refreshments were served, and he was received en prince. This was not at all what he wanted. He had anticipated a pleasant tete-a-tete over a cup of tea, but he was too much of a gentleman to express his disappointment. He never came again however, and that was just what the husband wanted."

An Intoxicating Fur Cloak.

St. James Gazette.

A French lady, calling herself the Baroness de Saint Estrapade, who lately appeared before the Correctional Tribunal of the Seine on a charge of "Ivresse manifeste"—in brutal English drunk and disorderly—succeeded in convincing the President of that court that the wearing of a fur cloak may produce an eccentricity of behavior as deceptive in its way as that produced by too liberal a consumption of salmon. Some time ago, she informed the court, she read in a journal that the surest way of preserving furs from the ravages of moths was to stow them away in an empty spirit-cask. She accordingly bought one a month or two ago, and to its safe keeping she confided her fur cloak. A week ago, having to breakfast at Noel's, and the day being very cold, she put on this garment; when, as she declares, once out of doors, the combined effect of the cold and the alcoholic fumes emanating from the cloak made her giddy, and produced all the appearances of intoxication. The "agent" who took her up deposed that "she smelt of alcohol at fifteen paces"—a piece of testimony rather in her favor than otherwise; and her bonne deposed to the purchase of the cask and its employment as a wardrobe. The Judge, after remarking that if every lady adopted this line of defense to the particular charge brought against the Baroness, conviction would be impossible, he acquitted her.

Lost Art Restored.

Washington Post.

Mr. P. H. Ensworth and Dr. Lovett, the latter a physician and scientist of Erie, Pa., have made application at the patent office for a patent on a recently discovered process of preserving the dead, supposed to be the long lost Egyptian art. Dr. Lovett claims that partly by accident and finally by experiment they have discovered a certain combination of antiseptic elements, which, if diffused through a dead body, even if, when in an advanced state of decomposition, will destroy all corruptive matter and convert the flesh into a cartilaginous state, the denser parts, such as the gristly part of the ear, being converted into a hard, horny substance, but natural in appearance. In one of the experiments the inventors, by the aid of electricity, applied the compound to the body of a dead infant. Ten weeks after the body had been removed from all contact with the compound the flesh had become like rubber, the cheeks were full and pliant to the touch, and the ears had become like polished horn. There was not the slightest odor, and the corpse seemed to have no more properties of decomposition than a rubber doll. Whether the body will remain in the pliant state, or whether it will become hard like a horn, as the denser parts now are, will probably take more than one lifetime to determine, but whatever change may take place in the body in course of time, it now seems void of all corruptible matter, and it is claimed it can not decay. The discovery has excited great interest among scientists. The art of preserving the dead has been lost to science probably since the subjugation of the Egyptians about the twelfth century before Christ.

"COL." FRANK JAMES.

That Distinguished Bandit Has Reason to Regard a Prison Cell as a Feathered Nest.

Letter in Philadelphia Times.

There is but little appearance of a cell about Col. James place of residence. When he gave himself up to Gov. Crittenden he was treated like a common prisoner. But such treatment was considered altogether too barbarous for a gentleman of Frank James' standing in the community. His friends got together and subscribed a sum of money sufficient to buy a beautiful Brussels carpet. It was presented to him a few days ago, and since then the cell has been transformed into a regular little palace. Entrance to the august presence of the ex-bandit is only to be obtained by card. For a time he allowed everybody to visit him, and he liked to tell marvelous tales of marvelous feats in the saddle. But this got monotonous. Too many people were anxious to shake the gentleman by the hand, and so he hit upon the card system. A visitor hands his card to a jail official. It is taken to Mr. James, and if Mr. James feels in the humor he remarks, "Show the gentleman in." If not, the visitor is told that Mr. James is reclining and cannot see visitors. That settles it; he is not disturbed.

A visitor to the jail, to-day, found the ex-bandit in a very talkative mood. It was just after dinner. He was reclining in a luxurious chair and enjoying himself. The carpet on the floor was soft and yielded to the tread. Around the walls hung pictures, some of them paintings, the gifts of admiring friends. There was no iron bedstead; there was no roll of dirty blankets in the corner. In their place was a fine old mahogany bedstead and a mattress of soft, downy feathers was covered with sheets of snowy whiteness. On a table were vases filled with freshly-cut flowers, sent in by ladies, who seem to take a great interest in the bandit king. The place had the fragrance of a floral establishment. Everything was neat, everything was comfortable, everything was in good taste.

James was faultlessly dressed. He spends a great deal or his time in his toilet. His locks were nicely parted. Not a hair went astray. His boots shone like a mirror. Such a fine polish had he given them that his face was reflected. His clothing was tasty. Not a speck of dust could be found, for the Bandit King is a very particular gentleman. There was nothing of the border- ruffian about him. He had every appearance of a well-to-do man of the world receiving a friend in his own apartments. It was hard to believe that this man was Frank James, the noted desperado, and this place a prison cell. His manner was polite in the extreme. He seemed to be well versed in the courtesies of society. The fact is that Frank James is not the ignorant outlaw that most people believe him to be. He is well read, and it is his boast that he has hosts of friends with whom he was in the habit of staying when hunted by the officers of the law. In their parlors he considered himself safe from detection and pursuit. Then, too, he has spent much time in the Western cities, and his conversation shows that he has not always been outside the limits of good society.

He took his visitor by the hand and shook it. Then, after a bit, he began to relate some of his experience, but he could not be drawn into a conversation upon his coming trial. This is fixed for November 27, at Kansas City. It is pretty sure that James will plead guilty, and that the Governor will set him free. He seems to have no care for the future. He said he wanted to settle down and lead an honest life, and he thought he could make a successful farmer. His wife is with him most of the time, and his mother, old Mrs. Samuels, is a frequent visitor. Both are sanguine that the bandit will eventually have his freedom.

The Doom of Steam.

Whatever else may survive in the future, Dr. Siemens is certain that the steam engine is doomed. Its fate is first to be confined to the driving of large dynamo machines, which will distribute force at present supplied by a myriad of small and wasteful engines, and then to be superseded altogether by the gas engine. Gas and electricity may be mutually hostile, but they are to unite their forces in order to extirpate the steam engine. The unpardonable sin of the steam engine is that of waste. Even the best of them consumd two pounds of coal per horse-power per hour, whereas, says Dr. Siemens, when the gas-producer has taken the place of the complex and dangerous steam boiler it will not take one pound of coal to develop one-horse power for one hour. But before gas banishes steam it will supersede coal as the agent for the development of steam. A pound of gas gives forth exactly twice the heat of coal, and even this may be improved upon. To burn raw coal is to squander our inheritance. Dr. Seimens gives some startling figures to prove that the by-products of the coal annually used in gas making are worth three millions sterling more than the coal used in producing them, without allowing anything for the value of the gas. Besides the products already utilized, 120,006 tons of sulphur are now wasted every year, which may yet be converted into a source of income. By abolishing the use of raw coal Dr. Seimens maintains that science, with some magician's wand, will "banish the black pall of smoke which hangs over our great cities, and restore to them pure air, bright sunshine, and blue skies." Nor shall we even have to suffer as compensation for the multiplication of enormous gasometers. The coal will be converted into gas at the bottom or the mine —a prospect not altogether to be contemplated, without alarm by the workers in fiery seams—and the gas carried by pipes wherever it is wanted. Electricity will also be made largely serviceable for the distribution of power. Even after allowing 50 per cent. for loss in transmission, the gain is still enormous. The electric light will chiefly be confined to light-

DR. HARTER'S

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice. DR. ROBERT SAMUELS, 2[illegible] Wash. Ave.

ST. LOUIS, MO., NOV. [illegible]th, 1881.

It gives color to the blood, natural healthful tone to the digestive organs and nervous system, making it applicable to General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Prostration of Vital Powers and Impotence.

IRON TONIC.

MANUFACTURED BY THE DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., 213 N. MAIN ST., ST. LOUIS.

No Whiskey!

Brown's Iron Bitters is one of the very few tonic medicines that are not composed mostly of alcohol or whiskey, thus becoming a fruitful source of intemperance by promoting a desire for rum.

Brown's Iron Bitters is guaranteed to be a non-intoxicating stimulant, and it will, in nearly every case, take the place of all liquor, and at the same time absolutely kill the desire for whiskey and other intoxicating beverages.

Rev. G. W. Rice, editor of the American Christian Review, says of Brown's Iron Bitters:

> Cin., O., Nov. 16, 1881.
> Gents:—The foolish wasting of vital force in business, pleasure, and vicious indulgence of our people, makes your preparation a necessity; and if applied, will save hundreds who resort to saloons for temporary recuperation.

Brown's Iron Bitters has been thoroughly tested for dyspepsia, indigestion, biliousness, weakness, debility, overwork, rheumatism, neuralgia, consumption, liver complaints, kidney troubles, &c., and it never fails to render speedy and permanent relief.

Ayer's
Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

It is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The Vigor cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair

The Vigor is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

"Why not?"

"Concordia has fallen off [illegible] cents, and I don't dare show up until it picks up again."

"What have the fluctuations of Concordia got to do with [illegible]?"

"A good deal," answered the boy. "My teacher has one [illegible] shares of the stock, and when it falls a few cents we will catch it [illegible]. I keep my eye on the list, and when there's a break you bet I don't go to school. I play sick. Golly, how she basted me when Mount Diablo busted down to two dollars. [illegible] Would Do.

"Mamma, dear" said a New Haven girl just in the flush of womanhood, "I have something to tell you. George has proposed, and I have accepted." "My dear child, I cannot think of your disgracing yourself. George is not a suitable match for you. [illegible] would make [illegible] of the family, and he would pay no more board." Thus will be seen the incompatibility of a boarding house girl falling in love with one of the boarders.—New Haven Register.

Untutored Lo.—The Indians of northern Michigan still observe the rites and ceremonies which have grown out of the traditions and superstitions of the aborigines of this continent. A report from Cross Village, Michigan, of last week says: Wednesday was a grand feast day here. The Indians killed chickens, hogs and cattle the day before to feed those who were dead. The first fed were the dead little ones, and Thursday the old folks (dead ones) were fed. Each family cook what they have and invite their friends; then the live ones eat for the dead ones. They will not feed them again until next July when the whortleberries are ripe. —Lagrange Register.

A man in Georgia lost a gold collar button two years ago, and recently, the missing jewelry was found in the fat of the digestive organs of a slaughtered cow. How the cow got under the bureau in the bed-room where a detached collar button always rolls, is an inexplicable mystery.—Norristown Herald.

TESTIMONIALS.

Gentlemen: Your buggies have given me entire satisfaction, both in style and durability. I have used them for the past three years. Your recent improvements on road wagons I consider the best in the market.
N. EB. H. RAMBURG.
Frederick Maryland.

Dear Sirs: We have used buggies of your make that have been in use three years, and no buggy we have that cost twice the amount has given better satisfaction.
JAMES H. ALEXANDER.
Johnstown, Pa.

Gentlemen: We have used the Columbus Buggy Company's work for the last five years and can conscientiously recommend it as strictly first class as to style, material, workmanship and durability. Your buggies have given better satisfaction than any other make of vehicles we had in use for the last ten years.
PALMER & WHITTAKER.

Gentlemen: It gives me pleasure to state that I have been selling your buggies and carriages for four years, and can safely recommend them to any one in want of a buggy or carriage. Yours Truly, J. L. GRIBBLE.
Macomb, Illinois.

Gentlemen: With over fifteen years experience in building buggies, wagons, &c., I do not hesitate in saying your buggies and carriages are strictly first-class in workmanship, material and proportions, filling a long-felt want for a reliable article that can be sold at a price lower than any ordinary manufacturer can produce and sell the same quality of Work at. Yours, etc. I.S. KRICK, Conneautville Pa.

Gentlemen: I have used your Brewster side-bar buggies for four years, together with buggies that cost me $300 and $350, and your buggies were the first that went out, on account of being side-bar. They have not cost me $5 for repairs, and those I have sold of your make have given good satisfaction. I think that you make the cheapest and best road wagons that are made in the United States for the money.
Respectfully, F. H. HAMLIN, Lawrence Kansas.

Dear Sirs: We have been using your buggies for the last four or five years. They have given entire satisfaction. I think they are the best buggies made for the money.
W. R. GRIMES & CO., Liverymen, Whitehall Illinois.

Gentlemen: We have been handling your work for two seasons, and have in every instance found your buggies first class. We never have had one of your jobs returned to us for repairs; neither have we had a single complaint on account of work not being perfectly satisfactory. Very Respectfully, H.P. BUCKLEY & CO., Springfield, Illinois.

Gentlemen: I have no hesitancy in saying that the buggies manufactured by the Columbus Buggy Company are the best work for the price I have any knowledge of. In not a single instance has there been any dissatisfaction on the part of any one of my customers.
FRANK L. HALL.
Owensboro, Ky.

Dear Sirs: For the past two years we have used your buggies side by side with other makes in both our stables, and are perfectly satisfied with the strength, durability and workmanship compared with others. As fast as our stock in livery is used up we shall replace them with your manufacture, knowing from experience that it is the best we can do. Respectfully,

An Ode to a Stovepipe.

Infernal stuff, your nature well I know,
So when I took you down six months ago,
Each piece I numbered, so that I might tell
Exactly how you'd go together well.

And now the time for chilly days draws nigh,
To put you up again I madly try,
But all in vain. The joints that then did fit
Now do not come within an inch of it.

I get you two-thirds put in place, and then
Crash you go tumbling to the floor again.
Once more I try. You're rather full of soot,
And I am getting daubed from head to foot.

I jamb my thumb, but still I persevere.
One piece goes down again and takes my ear.
I grab to catch the piece, another goes,
And, falling, scrapes the hide all off my nose.

And then my blood gets boiling, and I say
By all that's blue, I'll fix you, anyway!
Once more I go to work. By patience great
I get all but a single section straight.

And that I am about to place, when, oh!
The chair I stand on tips. Down flat I go;
While on and round me with a horrid crash,
The whole comes down again in one grand smash.

And then my wife remarked: "I never saw
A man so clumsy!" I say: "hold your jaw!
And for a tinman send, while I retire
To wash myself, and swear, to vent my ire."

He Knocked Off Four.

A correspondent of the Detroit Free Press says:

In riding over to Lost Mountain from Marietta, I came across a young man who was digging post-holes for a barbed-wire fence, and when I told him what I wanted, he replied:

"I'll go with you. I was in that fout myself and can point out every position."

When we reached the ground he began telling where this and that regiment was stationed, and finally he halted beside a huge boulder and said:

"Right here, stranger, was where I squatted for four long hours. I rested my gun right thar' on that ledge, and I reckon I killed exactly twenty-eight Yanks that day."

"No!"

"Solemn fact, and I know a dozen men who will swear to it."

"Let's see? The battle was fought in 1864?"

"K'rect you are."

"That's about eighteen years ago?"

"Jist about."

"And you are about twenty-five years old?"

"I was twenty-five this spring."

Then I looked at him for a long time, but he never winced. When we were going home, and after a long period of silence, he suddenly remarked:

"Stranger, don't you believe I was thar'?"

"Perhaps you were, but you see you were not quite seven years old on the day of that fight."

"That's what I've been figuring on," he continued, in a very serious voice, "and I'll tell you what I am willing to do."

"Well!"

"I'll call it twenty-four instead of twenty-eight dead Yanks in front of my position. That's fair, isn't it?"

I told him that nothing could be more liberal, and cordial relations were at once re-established.

London Pavements.

Beneath every square foot of wood paving in London there is a layer of concrete foundation five or six inches thick. It is very much like the macadamized road, only that it is very deep and very solid. It is made of fragments of stone rolled in cement and clay, and makes a magnificent bedrock for the blocks of wood to rest on. The way they roll their macadam streets here is instructive. Over the various layers of broken stone and cement they run a steam roller which is quite as heavy as the biggest railway engine in America. This goes back and forth over the same ground for days together until it has mashed the material down so that when it comes to be dug up for fixing street pipes the only way to make any impression on it is with a drill and sledge-hammer, such as would be used in blasting a granite cliff. Making streets in London is mighty unpleasant for the neighbors, but when the work is done it doesn't fizzle out in a few days. One sees macadamized roads as smooth as a billiard table right in the heart of London, wholly unaffected by the flow of heavy traffic. The streets are dirtier here than they are anywhere else on earth. They have none of our street-sweeping machines, and when they "sprinkle" a street they simply flood it, so that there is nothing but a creamy quality of mud on the surface. To call London clean, as the natives always do, is a hideous and mocking sarcasm. To say it is the best-paved city in the world is to tell the plain, unvarnished truth.—Correspondence of Chicago News.

The Heathen Chinee.

A Chinaman thus describes his experience at draw-poker: "I diaw thlee cardee, get flo acee, bet flive dolla, nobody clom in. Next timee I diaw two cardee, get flo kingee, bet ten dolla, nobody clom in. Next timee I diaw one cardee, get no flushee, bet flfteep dolla, everybody clom in, Chinaman busted."

The goose is an inoffensive fowl, and yet everybody gets "down" on her.

For Naught.

It must certainly be humiliating to the few democratic champions of prohibition in northern Indiana to contemplate the barren results of their labors during the recent campaign. In Elkhart county, for example, Mr. H. D. Wilson deserted the party with which he had been identified for many years and entered upon an active campaign in behalf of the republican ticket. His efforts were responded to by an appreciative people in a manner not according to Mr. Wilson's fancy. The republican majority of two years ago was reduced one half on the state ticket and the submission candidate for the legislature, whose cause was especially espoused by Mr. Wilson, narrowly escaped defeat, being elected by a majority of only sixteen. In addition to this, the democrats elected their candidates for clerk, auditor, surveyor and three commissioners. In Kosciusko county another democratic prohibition champion in the person of Jack North made a particularly vehement fight against the democratic candidate for representative, William Conrad. And Jack's labors were rewarded by Mr. Conrad cutting down the republican majority about four hundred votes. In DeKalb county a democratic preacher named Kane and a democratic office holder named Baxter did their utmost to defeat the re-election of D. D. Moody on the prohibition issue, but signally failed. Down in the Huntington senatorial district the notorious L. M. Milligan blossomed as a democratic submissionist and did his utmost to defeat Capt. Hilligass for the senate. His efforts were rewarded by Hilligass' election by 4,000 majority. In Cass county, where the persistent office-seeker, Mayor Jacobs, apostacized, the democrats more than doubled their majority. And so on throughout the state, wherever renegades sought to brand the democratic organization as a whisky party for standing bravely and manfully by the imperishable principle of personal liberty.—[Ligonier Banner.

Warsaw Union: A meeting of the directors of the contemplated new railroad under the name of the Indiana Pacific Railroad was held at the Kirtley House on last Tuesday afternoon. This road commences at Auburn Junction and is intended to extend as far west as North Judson, in Starke county, making Oswego and Leesburg in this county, points. The officers are Wm. Sear, president; D. D. Snyder, vice-president; Samuel France, secretary. The directors are R. H. Curran, Bourbon; Charles D. Rippey, Leesburg; Samuel France, Bourbon; William Sear, Bourbon; H. B. Stanley, Leesburg; Benjamin Yohn, North Webster; Oliver T. Johnson, Oswego; H. M. Bicknell, Garrett; Joel Hall, North Galveston, D. D. Snyder, J. A. Barns, Auburn; A. M. Jackson, H. A. Shambaugh, John Thumma, Wolf Lake; George Lightcap, North Judson. We understand about fifty thousand dollars stock has already been taken. The gentlemen who were in this city Tuesday, are not only enthusiastically in favor of the enterprise, but are sanguine that the road will be built. When completed, it will open a country to railroad communication, while not laboring under any positive disadvantages, will be largely benefitted thereby.

A white girl in Indiana, who recently eloped with a negro, has returned to her folks since hearing the result of the late election. She says that her republican party is played out, and she is afraid that her course in marrying the negro will not, in the future be sustained by popular approval. So long as she had the least backing from the administration, she says she was willing to prove a true and devoted wife, but as her course has not been endorsed at the polls she feels it incumbent on her to return to the paternal roof tree and three square meals a day.[Check.

Lagrange Democrat: "John W. Holcombe will be our next state superindent. If he will do as well as the present one, John M. Bloss, has done, we shall be satisfied. Mr. Bloss has done more in the correction of reports, statistical and enumeration, in breaking up the unlawful sale of examination questions, and of raising the moral tone of teachers and superintendents of the state than any man who ever held the office." Mr. Holcombe will not be found wanting in any particular.—[Valporaiso Messenger.

Dredging For Gold.

A LOT OF LOONEYS ON THE NEW HAMPSHIRE COAST.

(From New York papers.)

A special from Portsmouth, N. H., says: Considerable excitement prevails in this city and Newcastle over the arrival at the latter place early this morning of a fleet of dredges and scows under the management of, and owned by, the widely known Government contractor, Thomas Simmonds, who is under engagement to immediately commence operations in the river bed, near Campbell's Island, in that town, to recover the alleged buried treasure, said to have been placed there many years ago under mysterious circumstances. The owners of the claim, who hail from Boston, and are men of wealth and reliability, state that the treasure consists of two casks of gold coin, a barrel of silver, and a box of coins, and are confident of soon bringing to the surface rich returns for their large outlay. The contractor has nine men, including divers, at work over the spot, the precise location of which had been previously made by several distinguished experts, each of whom had, unknown to others designated exactly the same place, these results agreeing in every particular, it is said, with the description given in a document relating thereto, and which has been in the possession of one of the claimants for some years.

Prehistoric Footprints.

The academicians met at Columbia College for the last time yesterday. Prof. Marsh, of Yale college, chalked on the blackboard pictures of the supposed human footprints found recently in Nevada. They were occasionally found near Carson, Nevada, and general attention was drawn to them by the newspapers in the west. It is popularly supposed that they are true human footprints. They are of large size, being from twenty to twenty-eight inches in length, and this is against the theory that they are of human origin.

A more serious objection, however, is the fact that the stride of the tracks from left to right is too great to have a doubt they were made by something other than man. The tracks are found in the pliocene geological formation in which are also found remains of gigantic horses and elephants. It is a curious fact that the footsteps are those of a man or animal which appeared to wear a sandal. That the tracks are footsteps is not doubted by Prof. Marsh.

They led up to a wall of rock and stopped. Masses of the rock were removed and the footstep stratum was laid bare. The footsteps were found to continue under the rock. Prof. Marsh believes that the footsteps were made by species of gigantic sloth, the name of the genus being the monotherium. Prof. Lecomt is looking for the bones of the animal.

Travelling in a Canoe.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 10.—Dr. S. D. Kendall and wife, of St. Johnsonburg, Vt., and Dr. C. A. Kneide of Schuylerville, N. Y., reached here to-day by canoe, having left Lake George, August 19, going thence to the Allegheny and down the Ohio. Mrs. Kendall will return home from here, but the others propose to continue their voyage to the gulf and thence along the coast to New York and up the Hudson to the starting point, which they hope to make next August. They are the guests here of the Cincinnati Canoe Club.

The head lines of the Paducah (Ky.) Times, republican, on the recent Democratic tornado, are pointed: "This is Hard. The Whole Country has gone Clean Daft. And the Nasty Democrats, Like a Plague, have Swept Over the Country. We are Whipped and Routed, and there is No Help for Us. Oh! that Grant were President, that he Might Call out the Troops to Put Down this Awful Rebellion Against the Grand Old Party. Oh! where are Morton and Chandler now?. One blast from their Bugle-Horn was worth Ten Thousand Men. Michigan, New York, Indiana, All Gone, save Honor and a Republican Constable in Iowa, who ran ahead of his Ticket."

Twenty-six years ago, when James Buchanan was elected president, Mrs. Egle of Harrisburg, put a bottle of wine aside in her cellar, and said it should not be opened until Pennsylvania had elected a democratic governor. Last Saturday the bottle was opened and drank with much enthusiasm.

The republicans can "point with pride" to Dakota. Captain Raymond, republican candidate for congress, carried every county in the territory.

AUBURN, : : INDIANA

HERE AND THERE.

RUSSIA'S debt, which has almost doubled since 1872, is now $2,755,000,000.

DR. DICKEY, a Philadelphia Presbyterian preacher, wears a Geneva gown in his pulpit.

THE Episcopal church of this country proposes to raise a building fund of one million dollars.

GOVERNOR BUTLER will recommend the abolition of the poll-tax as a qualification for voting in Massachusetts.

CHARLES H. REED, the Chicago lawyer who defended Guiteau, wants Congress to give him $5,000 for that service.

THE Garfield Board of Audit has footed up the bills, and finds that the claims of physicians aggregate $91,000 and other claims $88,000.

OWING to the prevalence of diptheria and other contagious diseases in Boston, public funerals have been forbidden by the Board of Health.

CADETS JAMES R. PAGIN, of Indiana, and James C. Laurison, of Ohio, have been court martialed and dismissed from the Naval Academy for hazing.

THE remains of Dr. S. Earhart, of Allegheny City, were cremated at LeMoyne's furnace, Washington, Pa., the other day, making the fifteenth incineration in that furnace.

GEN. THOMAS REYNOLDS was held in $8,000 bail in the United States Court at Madison, Wis., for signing the names of dead men to pension papers and drawing money thereon.

IT is estimated that the annual iron production of the world is 19,487,610 tons, and of this Great Britain, the United States, Germany, and France contribute 88. 4 per cent—the first two 64. 8 per cent.

IT is estimated that the Standard Oil company have made $20,000,000 or $30,000,000 out of recent speculative panics. Should oil go up to $2, they would pocket, it is believed, some $70,000,000 more.

A CLAIM for $1,000,000 will be preferred against the United States by the province of Quebec, for wrongfully charging 20 per cent. duty on hay imported there, when the proper duty was only 10 per cent.

THE census of 1880 shows that $2,790,223,506 are invested in manufacturing enterprises in the United States, producing in the aggregate $5,369,667,706 worth of manufactured articles annually, and employing over two millions of hands.

IT is a curious fact that in the capture of $8,880,124 of counterfeit money in the past year there were no new counterfeit notes upon the treasury or national bank issues. It shows an overthrow of the combination of skillful engravers.

BY the official count, Glick, the Democratic and anti-Prohibition candidate against St. John, for Governor of Kansas, lacks 12,852 of a clear majority. His plurality over St. John is 8,081. Robinson, the Greenbacker, received 20,988 votes.

AN engineer on the Rhenish railway, after careful calculation, says that the average duration of steel rails, where twenty-four trains pass over them daily, is thirty years, while that of iron rails, with a traffic of seventeen trains, is eleven years.

ACCORDING to the official census report, there are nearly 5,000,000 persons in the United States, of 10 years of age and upward, who cannot read or write. Most of the illiterate are in the South, and the number is by no means confined to the colored population.

THE Cincinnati College of Music announces the programme and artists for the next Opera Festival, to be given in Music Hall, January 29, 30, 31, and February 1, 2 and 3, in all eight performances. Mesdames Patti, Albani and Madia will be the leading singers.

LOUISIANA'S crops of sugar, rice and cotton are enormous. Some of the sugar plantations are yielding three hogsheads of sugar and six barrels of molasses to the acre. This is remarkable. The planters are in high glee. Net incomes of $50,000 to $500,000 are talked of.

ABOUT a dozen Turks and Armenians have arrived at Palestine, Texas, looking for a favorable location for the cultivation of cocoons and silk worms. A large number of their countrymen will follow them to Texas should the climate, etc., prove favorable to silk culture.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Tribune says there are 20,000 young women in Ireland seeking opportunity to emigrate to America. They have no means of their own, and an appeal is made for assistance to the Irish-Americans and the general public of this country.

IN regard to the reported systematic robbing of mails in Colorado, a Denver dispatch says there is no doubt that drafts and postal orders aggregating $600,000 have been taken from the pouches within the past year, while the loss of currency cannot be estimated. The more recent thefts occurred October 2, 17 and 31, and November 7.

THE question of religiously annointing the sick, as indicated in the epistle of St. James, was referred to in a Presbyterian church at San Rafael, Cal., by a member who believed in it. The elders called upon the Presbytery for a decision, and the Presbytery have called upon the Synod, which will probably ask the General Assembly to pronounce upon the subject.

REV. DR. POWERS, the pastor of the Christian Church of which the late President Garfield was a member, has returned to Washington from soliciting subscriptions in different sections of the country for the erection of a new Church. He states that of the $52,000 necessary to the completion of the new church edifice, but, $10,000 now remain to be raised.

THE Toronto Globe says that one of the questions put to the candidates at a recent examination for the civil service held in that city was: "A man left $20,000 by his will, the sum to be divided between his two sons, one of whom was to receive $1,000 more than the other." The question was "too hard" for the applicants. Every one of them answered that the one son was to receive $11,000 and the other $9,000.

THE other day a crank from Ohio made an atttempt to enter the White House as "King of America and Great Britain," stating that he owned both countries. He was kept at Police Headquarters, a conference of the police physicians was held, and he was sent to the Insane Asylum. In reading this item the thought will come to most minds, "What if Guiteau had been treated this way, as he should have been?"

THE functionaries of the Italian government are no respecters of persons. An execution for taxes was recently issued against some property owned by the Pope, who received a notice made out in strict legal form: "To Citizen Joachim Pecci; by trade or profession, Pope; conducting business (also residing) at the Vatican palace, Rome." His Holiness at once paid the taxes and obtained therefor a receipt reading: "Received of Citizen Joachim Pecci," etc.

THE annual report of the Treasury shows the receipts of the Government, exclusive of the public debt, during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1882, to be $403,525,250; and the expenditures, exclusive of the redemption of public debt, $257,981,439; that 17,124,196 legal tender notes, representing $78,077,801, were counted and sent to the Comptroller for destruction, and others issued in place thereof.

THE diplomatic service of the United States during the past fiscal year cost $379,000. Consular fees, according to the report of the Fifth Auditor, notwithstanding the reduction in charges which went into effect three months after the beginning of the year, amounted to $889,000, an excess of $47,000 over those of 1881. This indicates a large increase in the amount of business transacted.

THE official footings of the late election, as proclaimed by the Secretary of State, show a total vote of 444,672, precisely 26,000 less than in 1880. The Republican vote for Hawn is 210,234, a decrease of 21,930 since 1880, while the Democratic vote for Myers is 220,916, a decrease from the 1880 vote of only 4,604. The National vote has increased 584, being 12,986 for Weaver, in 1880, and 13,520 for Leonard in 1882. The official plurality for Myers is 10 684.

ELDER ST. JOHN, recognized as a substantial pillar in the Mormon church, while in New York lately, stated that the Mormons were compelled to recognize the Edmunds law as it stands, but believe it to be unconstitutional, and will, at the next session of Congress, make mighty efforts to have it suspended or repealed. He says the passage of the law, which disfranchises polygamists, "is admitted to be a great victory against the Mormons." According to St. John there have been few converts to the Mormon faith since the Edmunds bill became a law.

WHEN the supply of coal gets short elsewhere, the world can turn to China for "black diamonds." Baron Richthofen shows that in that country the supply of antharacite coal is not less than 630,000,000,000 of tons, and the bituminous coal supply is just as large. The Baron thinks that, taking what is left in other parts of the world with the Chinese area, we need not fear a fuel famine. He thinks that the supply in the Chinese province of Shansi alone will last the world about 4,200 years.

THERE is a strange rumbling noise audible upon Red River, Texas, and as the locality is fifteen miles from any railroad, it can not be attributed to passing trains. The inhabitants are much excited over it, believing that it presages volcanic action. It resembles the sound of a railway train, or the roar of a distant waterfall. Its range, which is not changable, is from north to northwest, and it recalls the ominous sounds described by Humboldt as preceding the great earthquake of 1750 in Mexico, when the volcanic mountain of Jorulla was upheaved. Scientific investigation will probably be ordered soon by the State authorities.

THE operations and success of one of the most gigantic monopolies in this country are briefly described as follows: "The Standard oil company is at present one of the most conspicuous of the great monopolies with which the trade of the country is being strangled. In a late trial in which the State of Pennsylvania sought to recover certain taxes assessed upon the company, it set up the defense that it was an Ohio corporation. The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania decided the suits in favor of the company, three of the judges dissenting. The trial compelled the company to reveal the character of its operations and the amount of its profits. The capital stock in 1872 was $1,000,000. This was subsequently increased to $3,500,000. On this last capitalization, dividends to the amount of $10,321,312 were paid in 1880. This represents a subsidy of 300 per cent. levied by this monopoly on the poor man's lamp. But besides these previously unheard-of earnings the company avers to have also acquired property and assets to the value of $30,000,000, which shows that in nine years this goose has laid golden eggs to the value of $40,000,000. It was all done through crafty manipulation of products and markets; through astute alliance with railroad kings; through unrelenting warfare upon rivals, and finally through the manipulation of Legislatures and Courts.

Dennis Field, one of the jurors who convicted Hynes of murder, for which he was hanged at Limerick, was stabbed to death in Dublin Monday. At night a bailiff named Mallon was stabbed in the head, and received a serious wound.

The killing of Detective Cox, at Dublin, has given use to the opinion that a murder was being planned by the conspirators when accosted by the police. Archbishop McCabe denounced the act as emanating from secret societies. Dolan, who was shot by the officers, will, it is believed, recover. He exhibits the utmost unconcern, and when the surgeons were examining his wounds, told them to "Probe away, and be d——d."

Michael Davitt, in a speech at Navan Saturday night, said Gladstone should apply the surplus of the arrears estimates to ward off the threatened famine in the west of Ireland. If this were not done, then no rent should be paid from now until next May. He cited the remarks of Archbishop Hughes in New York in 1848 as proof conclusive that a man in need of bread was bound to observe no law, human or divine, in obtaining it.

Noteworthy Trees.

An elm near Lawrenceberg, Tenn, is 105 feet from tip to tip of its branches, and 326 feet in circumferance.

A Pennsylvania walnut tree, that was hollow and nine feet in diameter, was sawed down lately, and the stump used as a pen for a number of hogs.

A cherry tree, in Carter county, Ky., is 18½ feet in circumferance and 60 feet high and its branches shade a lot 43 feet across.

Near the fair-street depot, Kingston N. Y, is a grand old elm. It is of bouquet-shape, and during the present season over 200 birds built nests in its branches.

At the mouth of Grassy Run, in Spring hill township, Pennsylvania, there stood a sycamore tree that was hollow at the butt, and Joshua Brooks used it for his horse stable.

In Green county Mississippi, is a double pine tree which has two distinct trunks 20 feet apart uniting 30 feet above the ground, forming at that point one solid trunk, round and symmetrical.

A tree recently cut in Mexico, Mo, measured nine feet through near the ground, and was 110 feet high. The first limb grew out at a height of 30 feet from the roots. The tree was at least 300 years old. When it fell 12 squirrels and one coon were killed.

The Moral of the Seguin Tragedy

New York Cor. Philadelphia Record.

The daily press does not seem to have hit upon the actual moral of the Suguin case. Three revolvers were habitually kept handy for the use of any body in the house who might feel inclined for murder or suicide. It was this that made it possible for the frantic mother to take her three helpless babes into an upper room, bind their little hands, blind their accusing eyes and murder them. Yet nearly every respectable household in the city furnishes similar facilities to its members. In the last ten years one burglar has been killed in his house by a citizen, shot down in his parlor, to the quiet man's great horror, and during that time there have probably been a thousand accidents from the careless use of pistols, and numberless suicides. One of these tragedies never got into print. It happened in the family of an ex-Confederate General, a graduate of West Point, who had formerly taken my name and pedigree when I was captured by his troops. He had an only daughter, a little girl of 10 years. Coming home one night he said to her: "Go to papa's coat that is hanging in the hall and see what he has brought for you." The child ran, thrust her hand eagerly into the wrong pocket, grasped a pistol unknowingly, and, in the endeavor to pull it out, shot herself through the heart. And so the little life that was of more account than all the revolvers in the city was quenched in blood. And the father? He will never forgive himself. Yet as many revolvers will be sold this year as last, and they will make targets of innocent people, as usual.

Big Sums of Money.

A valuation of $400,000,000 in round numbers is reported on property in Texas this year.

The sum of $1,650,000 is now invested in the manufacture of iron in the Birmingham, Ala., district.

The new Iowa State Capital has thus far cost $2,000 000 and it will require $500 000 to finish it. It is 365 feet long from north to south, and measures 274 from the sidewalk to the top of the central dome.

It will require an expenditure of at least $5,000,000 by the Italian Government to make good the damage done to roads, bridges and public buildings by the inundation, to say nothing of aid to the many sufferers.

About 1,500 miles of new railroad were put into operation in the Southern States last year. The gross earnings of Southern roads reached $63,000,000, and the net earnings increased from $18,000,000 in 1880 to more than $24,000,000.

In the production of coal, Illinois is now second only to Pennsylvania. The State Bureau of Labor reports that the output has increased from 6,000,000 tons in 1880 to 9,000,000 tons in 1882, and that the value of the mines has been nearly $14,000,000.

During the five years 1877-1881, the average loss by fires in the United States and Canada in the month of September alone was $5,950,000. This year, omitting the fires in which the loss was less than $10,000, the record shows 123 in number, and the aggregate loss $6,205,000.

A huge transaction in Mississippi lands is noticeable because there has been comparatively so little push reported in that State since the war. A syndicate of English capitalists have agreed to purchase and improve 1 300,000 acres. The sum of $500,000 is available for the preliminary operation, that of cutting and preparing for market the timber now standing, after which the company will go extensively into cotton raising.

Work is progressing rapidly on the library which Mr. Pratt is building for the city of Baltimore, and when completed it will have a shelf capacity of 200,000 volumes. The value of the ground and library building is estimated at $225,000. This Mr. Pratt has given to the citizens, together with the sum of $833,333, which will yield $50,000 per annum, in consideration that the city will adopt an ordinance for creating and granting a perpetual annuity of $50,000 for the purchase and maintainance of the library, with four branches in different parts of the city.

WASHINGTON.

Secretary Folger denied himself to visitors Monday morning, being engaged in the preparation of his annual report. His private secretary pronounces the story that he has tendered his resignation as entirely unfounded. Rumors are on the street that several prominent officers of the Postoffice Department will be dismissed for complicity with the star-routers, but up to this time (12 m.) the story lacks confirmation.

Secretary Folger, in an interview at one o'clock, denied in the most emphatic language that he had tendered his resignation, and added that the matter had never been referred to either by the President or himself. The lease of the Secretary's House has been renewed, but not for a year, as heretofore stated.

The summary dismissal of Marshal Henry, Postmaster Ainger, Assistant Postmaster Parker, M. D. Helm, foreman of the Congressional Record, and ex-Senator Spencer, Union Pacific Railroad Commissioner, by order of the President, acting upon letters from Attorney-General Brewster and Col. Bliss, continues to be the topic of discussion. The dismissed officers are charged with having obstructed the administration of justice by villifying the Judge, jury, and Government counsel, and by giving public expression to sympathy for the accused. Postmaster Ainger said he had never been implicated in any manner in the Star Route affairs. Assistant Postmaster Parker said he had never said or done anything to influence the judgment. Marshal Henry says the charge that he has in any way favored the defense in the Star Route trial is simply infamous. Ainger and Parker have addressed a letter to the President protesting against the aspersions on their characters. Thomas L. Tulloch has been appointed postmaster at Washington, to succeed Ainger.

The appointment of Tullock to succeed Ainger as postmaster in Washington is only temporary, but it is believed will be made permanent. The successor to Spencer, one of the government directors of the Union Pacific railway, will be appointed this afternoon. No selection has not yet been made for District Marshal to succeed Henry. Senator Logan was at the executive mansion this afternoon, and had a long interview with the President, and it is believed that the President is in favor of the retention in office of Public Printer Rounds. District Attorney Corkhill also had a long interview with the Attorney-General, and afterwards informed friends that he was safe.

It is stated authoritively that no further removals in connection with the Star Route cases are contemplated by the President at present. This would seem to indicate that there is no foundation for the rumors in circulation so far as they relate to high officials. The rumor that several subordinate officers in the Postoffice Department will be invited to resign seems to be well founded.

A prominent government officer, in conversation this morning, intimated there would be more removals on account of complicity with the Star-routers, but declined to mention names. Rumor has it that Disbursing Officer Burnside, of the Postoffice Department, and Fifth Auditor Ela, are likely to be among the number.

Rear Admiral Crosby, commanding the United States naval forces in the Southern Atlantic station, reports to the naval department from Montevideo, Oct 19, that he expected the transit of Venus party to arrive the next day, when the Brooklyn would proceed on her mission.

The estimated appropriations required for the fiscal year ending Jan 30 1884, for the civil establishment, have been completed. The aggregate is $22,350,945. The estimate for the same purpose last year was $19,529,083. The amount appropriated for the current fiscal year was $20,477,743.

In the Criminal Court this morning Judge Wylie, on the report of the physicians who examined Bigelow, the National Bank of the Republic embezzler, ordered that he be brought to court this afternoon.

The lease of Folger's residence in this city expires December 15, and friends of the Secretary attribute the report of his resignation to that fact. Folger, however, has renewed the lease for one year.

The transfer book of the 4 per cent. bonds of 1907 and currency 6s close at the Treasury on the evening of the 29th inst.

The annual report of Colonel Irish, Chief of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, shows that during the year there were completed and delivered 7,641, 108 sheets of notes and securities of the face value of $309.857,700; 24,251,459 sheets of internal revenue and customs cigar stamps, containing 987,221,149 stamps and 649,919 sheets of checks, drafts, etc. The aggregate expenditures for the year were $986,755. Of this amount there was expended in the execution of the work of the various bureaus of the Treasury Department and other departments and reimbursed by them from the proper appropriations under their control, $588,950. The aggregate expenditures of the year over that of the preceding year, deducting from the expenditures of that year the amounts paid for paper and expenses thereon, which this year were paid from a separate appropriation, was little less than 12 per cent. The increase in deliveries was a little over 20 per cent., and the increase in the number of employes about 10 per cent. At the close of the year the regular force of the bureau consisted of about 1,000 employes.

The Post-office Department to-day directed that the free delivery service be established at Keokuk, Iowa, January 1.

A scene occurred in the Criminal Court Tuesday morning, which is probably without a precedent. Yesterday, the sureties of Bigelow, the bank embezzler, were directed to have him in court to-day, under the penalty of the forfeiture of his bond. This morning a carriage drove up to the Court House, and three persons alighted, two of whom reached into the carriage, and lifted Bigelow out, carried him in their arms to the court-room, where he was placed on a lounge and covered with blankets. He was accompanied by the male members of his family, his attorney and his physician; was quite pale and weak, and appeared to be entirely prostrated, he lay on the lounge, with his eyes closed, taking no notice of what transpired about him. There are thirteen indictments against Bigelow, and, it being settled that the offense was misdemeanor and not felony, the court decided it would be sufficient to inform the defendant of the nature of the charges, without compelling him to listen to the reading of each indictment. The defendant not being able to stand or sit upright, the Clerk of the Court went to where he lay, made known to him the charge in each indictment, and received his plea of not guilty. Bigelow was then carried out of the court and replaced in a carriage, whereupon he was confronted by a detective with a warrant on an additional charge of embezzlement of $1,000 of the funds of the National Bank of the Republic He was then taken to the court room, where he waived a hearing, and gave bail to await the action of the Grand Jury Once more the sick man was put in the carriage, and this time permitted to return home His physicians think the exposure is likely to cause Bigelow's death, or at least place his life in great peril.

Major Merrill has arranged a plan of operations which he believes will result in preventing further raids upon the Crow Indian agency, in Montana, by the Canadian Indians. The plan is substantially as follows: As soon as the agent has information of a raid, he will put a force of Crows upon the trial with orders to recapture the stolen stock and destroy the thieves or drive them back to the agency. At the same time small detachments of Crows will be sent to the nearest military posts, where they will be joined by available troops and co-operate with the main body of pursuers. The directing motive will be the capture or destruction of the marauders.

It is stated authoritatively that the question of further dismissals or appointments in connection with the Star route cases was not referred to at the Cabinet meeting to-day The whole session was devoted to the consideration of the President's message, and other executive documents to be sent to Congress.

A colored crank from Pittsburg, called at the Executive Mansion to-day, and gave his name of Roscoe Conkling saying he had been sent to see the President on the most important matter by Treasurer Gilfillan He was informed of the Cabinet meeting then in progress, and left.

The new trial of the Star Route defendants will be commenced on the 4th proximo. The Government is ready. There will be unusual care taken in the selection of the jury and to protect the morals of the jurymen after they are chosen. The Attorney-General will give the case a more thorough personal attention, and will make the closing speech on behalf of the Government. Since the last trial, it is said, the Government has become possessed of some very important testimony not previously developed.

Life in the Army

By an Officer in the Army and Navy Journal.

It is mere holiday work in the service of the European nations compared with our. They have long periods of rest with large bodies of their troops of all arms quartered in fine cities, in splendid barracks, where they are almost in as full enjoyment of all the good things of life as the citizens, while with us our lives, in a measure, are passed cut off from almost everything that enhances life to the most humble. In my personal experience I have been eleven years straight without a single day from active duty. I have not been in New York city for twenty years, and not further East than Washington since 1866. I have been stationed at posts where we were from 250 to 400 miles from a railroad, and at one of which we did not taste even so common a vegetable as potatoes for six months, beef, bacon, bread, coffee and tea being our constant diet from Christmas to Christmas. My Captain and myself once paid $15 for one barrel of potatoes, and divided them for our family use, all of us being absolutely starved for a potato. Eggs are $1 a dozen. Butter not to be had at even $1 a pound, and everything else in the same ratio. I could give you many such incidents regarding the social life of our army officers on the "frontier," and the official life was one everlasting go scouting—scouting—scouting—Winter and Summer, Spring and Fall. My dear sir, there is not one person in ten thousand of our population knows anything about the hardships and self-denials which our little army undergoes, and many think it is all holiday work, wearing fine clothes and living on the fat of the land. The life of a line officer on the frontier is enough to wear out any man in twenty years' active and contintinuous service. Yet the country needs it, and patriots do it—for, after after all, what is the reward? I am sure it is not a big thing financially, and it does seem hard that we have to pray and beseech so hard for what we do get. Look at what Congress did last session in the face of a prayer sent them by three-fourths of the army officers asking for a little relief—and very little at that? We are worse off than we were before. Retirement at the age of 64, with a limited retired list, is no boon at all, and the very branch of the service that needs it most gets the least. I mean the "line."

Died in the Pulpit.

Philadelphia Record.

An exciting religious revival at the hall of the Heavenly Recruits, No. 1,222 North Eleventh street, was brought to an abrupt close, yesterday afternoon, by the death of one of the exhorters. The "Heavenly Recruits" are composed of members of the Salvation Army, Independent Methodists, and other free religious workers, and their meetings have often been marked by emotional scenes of striking character. Rude but powerful eloquence has characterized the addresses made to "the Recruits." At yesterday's meeting several of the members present had given in their "experience," and there was a subdued but powerful religious enthusiasm prevailing throughout the hall. Mr. Enos A. Kerns was particularly excited by the speeches, as was to be expected from his emotional and high-strung nature. When the excitement had reached its highest point Mr. Kerns arose to address the meeting. His face was very pale, but he spoke with considerable power, and his remarks made a great impression upon the congregation. As he was about to close some persons near him noticed that he appeared to gasp for breath. He tottered, and, with a sentence half spoken upon his lips, fel back—dead. There was a great commotion at once, and the dead exhorter was in a moment surrounded by a crowd of mourning friends. He was at once removed to his home, No. 1,737 Wallace street. Mr. Kerns has been prominently connected with the Methodist Church, and is a member of Trinity Church, at Sixteenth street and Fairmount avenue. For several months past he has been accustomed to visit the Recruits every Sunday afternoon. Some time ago he was a wholesale tobacco dealer on Market street, near Front, doing a very large business. Recently he retired and devoted his whole time to the church. For several years he has been suffering from a heart affliction, and of late has been annoyed more than usual by this trouble.

A Good One on Gen. Manson.

Indianapolis News

The Secretary of State's office is the place to go when a fellow has the blues and wants to hear a funny story. A good one was told this morning on Gen. Manson. Shortly after the late Governor Williams had assumed his duties, General Manson, who had been chairman of the State central committe, concluded he wanted a Tippecanoe county friend appointed State House Commissioner. He was sitting in the Secretory of State's office, surrounded by a group of politicians, when be remarked that he believed he would go into the Governor's office and broach the subject at once. He did so, stating to the Governor that owing to his (Manson's) services in the campaign he believed himself entitled to some consideration, and asked the Governor to appoint the Tippecanoe county man. Governor Williams said he'd think about it, but rather discouraged the General. The latter returned to the State Secretary's office, and everybody immediately wanted to know whether the Governor had consented to make the appointment. "I dunno," gruffly responded the war horse, "I elected Governor Williams, and by thunder! I think my recommendation ought to have some weight; but what in blazes can you expect of a man who wears a No 6 hat?"

General Manson had got just that far in his remarks, which were about become superfluous when Governor Williams' messenger appeared on the scene "Governor Williams told me to tell you, General," said the messenger, "that he doesn't care how much you loaf around his office but he doesn't want you to wear off his hat."

The crowd tumbled with a general scream all round, and the old General with the remark that "I thought this hat was blamed tight," handed it to the messenger while everybody rolled on the floor in an agony of hilarity.

A Man for an Emergency.

A locomotive with a raging wood fire beneath the boiler was dragging a long train up a heavy grade near Colfax, Cal., a week or two ago, when the wire netting over the smoke-stack blew out. Instantly a stream of live coals shot into the air and fell back upon the cars so thickly that there was great danger of a conflagration. The conductor stationed brakemen on top of the train and was hoping to surmount the grade without accident when, on looking over the way bills, he discovered to his horror that the car directly behind the locomotive was loaded with gunpowder. He immediately uncoupled it, without alarming the passengers, and while the other cars stood on the grade with the brakes hard on, the powder car was drawn swiftly up the slope and left on a side track. The engine then returned and took the rest of the train forward. The conductor, Charles Loughbridge, is entitled to public credit for his calm courage and sound judgment,

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice.

The Speakership Fight.

McMULLEN AND MOODY SAID TO BE THE LEADING CANDIDATES—BYNUM'S CHANCES NOT FLATTERING

The democratic majority in the next house of representatives will have a most embarrassing array of candidates from which to select their speaker. One or two of the gentlemen whose names have been mentioned have signified their intention of withdrawing, but six, real, genuine, earnest candidates remain in the field, namely: Horace Heffren, of Washington county; D. D. Moody, of DeKalb; Bellamy S. Sutton, of Shelby; W. D. Bynum, of Marion; Hugh D. McMullen, of Dearborn, and George D. H. Gibson, of Clark. Two of the candidates, Messrs. Moody and Gibson, were members of the last house; and Horace Heffren, as every one knows, has had plenty of legislative experience, although not in recent years. The other three are new members. Mr. Moody is the sole representative in northern Indiana, and should, therefore, if his canvass is rightly managed, go into the caucus with a very strong backing. The strength of W. D. Bynum, Marion county's candidate, is mainly in southern Indiana, his place of abode until about eighteen months ago having been at Washington, Daviess county. He will not be able materially to weaken the candidate from DeKalb county if the northern half of the state manifest any disposition to give Moody their solid support. Three of the other candidates are decidedly southern men, while Mr. Sutton would probably like to be regarded as on neutral grounds and as the candidate of the central counties. It is well understood that Mr. Sutton's chief object is to get even with the Marion county democracy. His chance for revenge has come, and he will not forget the attitude of the Marion county delegation in the last state convention. But although, probably, Mr. Sutton could not be driven from the track, it is more than likely that Mr. Bynum will find some means—the promise of the chairmanship of the committee on railroads, for instance—of coaxing his colleague from this joint representative district to step aside in his favor. Unless something of this kind is done it is thought Mr. Bynum's chances will be very slim, especially as several Indianapolis candidates for other offices in the gift of the legislature are rather anxious that a speaker should not be chosen from this county. Taking in the whole situation, the present indications are that Messrs. McMullen and Moody are the prominent candidates, the former being regarded the strongest of the southern aspirants, while Moody has northern Indiana practically to himself, and excellent arguments at his command by which to make that section a unit in its demand for the speakership of the next legislature. The fight will doubtless be waged with considerable earnestness, and not unlikely with some personal bitterness, and the republicans will have a chance of enjoying the fun.—Indianapolis Times.

SEVERAL republicans have been reported by republican exchanges, as having heard an echo of "rebel yell" since the late election. And again we ask: "Where was the man who had charge of the "solid south" and the "rebel debt" part of the machinery?" Even the recent political reverses, do not seem powerful enough to show to a few soft heads that such twaddle is becoming too transparent to be effectual.

WE call the attention of our readers to the article copied from the Indianapolis Times, in regard to the candidacy of Mr. Moody for the speakership of the house. The article is evidently prepared with care, and the paper, being one of the leading republican papers of the state. Must evidently treat the subject fairly. Don't fail to read it, and see how republicans who have no special interest in it, look at the matter.

IT will be remembered that during Turko-Russian war a few years ago, the Tool Company of Providence Rhode Island, furnished the Turks with a vast amount of arms and ammunition. Now, they have sued the Turkish government, for the pay, not being able to get it any other way. It makes a big lawsuit.

THE employes in the Indianapolis Sentinel were treated to turkey on Thanksgiving day. The financial head of the Sentinel, Hon. John C. Shoemaker, furnished seventy-four gobblers, which in the quaint language of the editor-in-chief will sing the "gobble song" no more.

THE curfew law, of the olden time, has been put in force by the English government in the city of Dublin recently. All the citizens must retire and put out the lights at nine o'clock in the evening. How would that suit over in this part of the world?

AT the recent meeting of the Labor Congress at Cleveland, Ohio, it was resolved almost unanimously, that a protective tariff was an evil, against which the laboring classes of the country should give a united opposition. Correct.

DORSEY has written a long letter in regard to his connection with the star route business. Of course he claims to be innocent. So do they all. But somebody cheated the government out of many millions of dollars, for all that.

THE Indianapolis Sentinel copies our article in relation to the speakership, as in fact do many of the papers in this part of the state. Keep it moving. This end of the state is entitled to it for once.

A MAN in Nappanee was recently arrested at his own request, and taken before a justice and fined. The fine was five dollars, which with the costs made it quite an expensive luxury.

CONGRESS begins its session on Monday. The session ends on the fourth of March, but will give time enough to do a little more work than was done at the last session.

WORTHY OF MENTION.

Some Beautiful Sights Seen by a Courier Reporter.

A Bonanza for our Readers to Take In.

Through the courtesy of Joseph Abright, one of the most successful jewelers in Northern Indiana, we were shown through his elegant stock of jewelry, silver ware, musical instruments, etc. The goods have been selected with very careful judgment and take the lead in this line from all other like establishments in the county. There is nothing but what can be had in the jewelry, silverware and musical instrument departments of this house, and every article is of the best quality. There is no class of trade where people are swindled as in the jewelry business. Frauds and imitations of all kinds are put upon our citizens by foreign firms and street venders. To convince the reader that Mr. Abright handles nothing but first-class goods, we have only to state that during his long stay among us he has drowned out several like establishments who opened out here for the purpose of selling "fine goods at low prices." Joe has been the only successful jeweler, whom we have any recollection of, that ever located in Auburn, and this fact alone should speak volumes for him as a mechanic and for his goods as being genuine. Parties buying holiday presents cannot suit the eye better or please the heart more perfectly than to purchase goods kept in this class of trade, and we earnestly advise all who contemplate buying articles herein mentioned to call at this house before making up their minds to buy.

We speak in Mr. Abright's behalf, not altogether from the fact that his goods are reliable, but because he is a worthy, enterprising citizen, and has proved himself a thorough, successful business financier. The Courier extends him a friendly feeling and hopes the future before him will be as pleasant and as profitable as the past.

Conspectus of Political History.

This excellent work, the result of long study, in the history of our country, carefully prepared by Prof. Walter R. Houghton, of the state university at Bloomington, is now being sold to our citizens. The agent for this county, is R. P. Smith, who is a resident of this township. The work is a very worthy one, and has become almost a necessity in teaching history in our schools. It is being used in institute work in various parts of the state. It is a chart, containing the entire course of politics, since the adoption of the present federal constitution and extending down to the present. It shows the terms of each president's office, and the names of the members of his cabinet. It shows all the changes in these offices, and the date at which the several cabinet offices were organized. In short it is as its name indicates, a brief history of our entire political course. Mr. Smith will also take orders for another very interesting book—"The Daughters of America, or The Women of the Century" a work written by Mrs. Phebe A. Hanaford, and giving a biographical sketch of all the eminent ladies that have graced the history of our country.

This week, the two new commissioners, O. H. Widney and B. D. Thomas took their places on the board. Both are men of business experience, and ability, and are already hard at work at their new duties. They will, we have no doubt, fill the position acceptably to all. The two retiring members, Edward Kelham and and John Snoub go out of office with the respect, and good wishes of all. They have done well, and been faithful servants to the public. They have administered the affairs of the county wisely, and prudently, in spite of what a few may feel disposed to say against them. No body of men, can sit in judgment on the affairs of a county without making enemies, and we think the retiring members, have made as few, as usually fall to the lot of a board of county commissioners. Mr. Oberlin, who holds over, will, we understand, be the president of the board during the rest of his term. This is due, not only to the experience he brings to the board, but, is we believe a courtesy extended to the member who has served longest in the office. They all start out with the best wishes of the people.

A Good Foundation.

In American households the prevailing complaints are weakness of the stomach and its consequences, indigestion, nervousness and rheumatism. Such sufferers can lay a good foundation for health by using Parker's Ginger Tonic as it tones up the stomach and nerves, and keeps the kidneys active to carry off their foul matter.—N. O. Picayune. 49-4t

LAST Friday, a sensational show was running in Cincinnati, and when the scene came off, in which some Buffalo Bill was to shoot an apple off a girl's head, by some mistake or accident, the shot was sent crashing through the poor girl's brain. The unfortunate actor, was arrested, and is nearly frantic over the sad affair.

I am cured of Catarrh and deafness after giving Elys' Cream Balm a thorough trial. My aunt was deaf in one ear. After using the Balm a few times her hearing was restored. F. D. Morse, Insurance Broker, Elisabeth. N. J. 48-2t.

The quieting, rest-procuring qualities, as well as the far-reaching and powerful curative effects of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, render it the very best remedy known for lung disease.

A new idea embraced in Elys' Cream Balm. Catarrh is cured by causing discharge and cleansing, and not by drying up. The application is easy and agreeable. Price 50 cents. Apply into nostrils with little finger. 48-2t.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NEWVILLE.

Silver wedding in town to-night. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Colburn celebrated their 25th anniversary wedding day this evening. A large number of relatives and friends are invited, and a pleasant time is anticipated by all. A more accurate description will be given next week.

Miss Emma Young called on friends while on her way to her school last Saturday. Miss Emma will teach at Coles Corners.

Rev. Fouts, of Butler, is in town to-night, the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Coburn.

Mr. Chase Moody and family are in town attending the silver wedding.

Mr. Geo. Wilson was seen on the streets of the pleasant little town of Newville, last Saturday.

Miss Josie Thomas, of Orangeville, was visiting friends in town Saturday last.

Dr. Rusell is holding a series of lectures in town this week. Dr. R. is an able speaker, and is well liked by all who know him.

Mr. L. Gibson has his new house completed.

Sol. S. tells of an awful railroad accident north of his house. When you see him jump him.

Cecil Rhodes and Lou Gibson of our surburb Newville, were in town late Saturday night.

O. H. W., is already chuck full of county commissioner work. O. H., takes hold of the work as though it was old business to him.

Sol. Shilling and Sons shipped another car load of swine Saturday last. Sol. is still King H.

Geo. Bleeks has sold his share in the saw mill to one of the firm, J. Lounsbery, the firms name will now be Yilly and Lounsbery. George will engage in the lumber business on his own account, he will undoubtedly make it a success, as he is well up to the business.

The saloon business seems to be in a flourishing condition in the east end of town, at least we thought so last Saturday, when the ladies in squads put in an appearance.

What was a few weeks ago a flourishing temperance organization, is now a kind of varieties, so say some of the knowing ones. Politics knocked the bottom out as we predicted.

A whisky crusade on a small scale was attempted in this town last Saturday by some of the temperance women. Mrs. J. D. Leighty, Mrs. M. E. Olds and Mrs. H. S. Sheffer were the first squad, and right manfully did they perform the duty assigned to them, but when their trick was off and after holding a council of war, it was determined to hold the reserve for further orders. We understand that some of the enlistments were vetoed by the husbands of the ladies who were to bring up the war. It is said that the men were loth to let their weaker halves go when they (the men) were not allowed to go without receiving a curtain lecture. So end our first saloon crusade by the own anxious ladies'.

BUTLER.

The sensation of the week has been the suspension of Strauss & Wolf our second largest dry goods house. Liabilities foot some $25,000. Assets perhaps $15,000.

A common expression: "were you caught in the storm?"

Quite a serious railroad accident occurred on the morning of the 2d, about one mile east of Butler, a brake became detached, throwing five cars laden with coal and other merchandize down an embankment 12 feet high. Smashing some of them like kindling wood, and scattering their contents. Two wrecking trains are busily engaged gathering up the fragments, an extempore telegraph office has been improvised from the debris, and a little rail road station exists for a day.

Notice of Appropriation Under the Railroad Act.

STATE OF INDIANA, } ss
DEKALB COUNTY,
In the DeKalb Circuit Court.

The Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway
vs.
William D. Boyle and Alma Boyle, his wife, Thomas Blackwell and Warner Blackwell, William Williams and Matilda Koontz Williams, his wife, Mary Jane Hixon.

Be it remembered that on the 21st day of November, 1882, the above named plaintiff, the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific Railway, by Charles B. Stuart, W. V. Stuart and James E. Rose, its attorneys, filed in the office of the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court its instrument of appropriation in writing, in pursuance of an act of the General Assembly of the state of Indiana, entitled, "An Act for the Incorporation of Railroad Companies, approved May 11th, 1852," against said William D. Boyle, Alma Boyle, his wife, Thomas Blackwell and Warner Blackwell, William Williams and Matilda Koontz Williams, his wife, and Mary Jane Hixon; and also the affidavit of a competent person that said defendants, William Williams and Matilda Koontz Williams, are non-residents of the State of Indiana. Said instrument of appropriation gives notice to said defendants and to all persons claiming any right, title or interest in or to the property hereinafter described, of its intention to appropriate the lands and water running thereon, and the rights and interests therein, hereinafter described, to-wit:

A strip of land two hundred and seventy (270) feet wide off of the south end of the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of Section 10, Township 34 north, range 14 east, containing eight and sixteen one hundredths (8.16) acres more or less. Also a part of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of Section 10, Township 34 north, range 14 east, to-wit: Beginning at a stake in the line north and south through the center of Section 10, one hundred and thirty (130) feet south of the center of said section; thence west four hundred and seventy-nine (479) feet to the line between William H. Madden and William D. Boyle; thence south along said line six hundred and ninety (690) feet to the corner of the land of William H. Madden and Adam Smith in William D. Boyle's line; thence east four hundred and seventy-nine (479) feet, to the line north and south through the center of Section 10; thence north along said line six hundred and ninety (690) feet, to the beginning, containing seven and fifty-nine hundredths (7.59) acres more or less, being a part of Section 10, Township 34 north, range 14 east, in said County of DeKalb, State of Indiana.

Said real estate so described is necessary for said railroad company, for the purpose of a water station, side tracks and depot grounds. And plaintiff also filed with said instrument of appropriation in said clerk's office a plat and outline of the property above described.

And said railway, not having agreed with the owners for the purchase of said property, has taken this course in accordance with the provisions of said act hereintofore mentioned. Said non-resident defendants are also notified that on Thursday, the 21st day of December, 1882, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, the said Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific railway will apply to the Hon. R. Wes. McBride, Judge of the DeKalb Circuit Court, at the court-house in Auburn, DeKalb County, State of Indiana, for the appointment of appraisers to assess the damages which said defendants and all other persons claiming any right title or interest in or to said real estate, will sustain by the appropriation of the property above described for the purposes within stated.

Witness my hand and the seal of said court, affixed at Auburn, DeKalb County, State of Indiana, on the 21st day of November, 1882.

[SEAL.] JOHN W. BAXTER, Clerk.

COMMISSIONER' SALE.

STATE OF INDIANA } ss
DEKALB COUNTY
In DeKalb Circuit Court, September term 1882:

Rachel Beatty,
vs. } Partition.
Abraham Beatty, et al

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned commissioner, appointed by the DeKalb Circuit Court, at its September session, A. D. 1882, in the above entitled cause, to sell the real estate hereinafter described, at private sale, will sell at private sale, the following premises situate in DeKalb county, in the state of Indiana, to-wit:

The north half of the southeast quarter and the south half of the south half of the northeast quarter, all in section thirty-three (33) township number thirty-three (33) north of range thirteen (13) east, containing one hundred and twenty acres of land, more or less.

Proposals for the purchase of said premises will be received by me at my office in the town of Auburn in DeKalb county, state of Indiana, from December 8th, A. D., 1882, until December 16th, A. D., 1882, at 12 o'clock M., of said day, at which time said premises will be sold to the person having made the highest and best offer therefor, provided said offer be equal in amount to the appraised value of said premises.

TERMS OF SALE:—One-third cash; one-third in nine months and one-third in eighteen months from the day of sale. The deferred payments to draw interest at six per cent from the day of sale, and secured to the satisfaction of said commissioner.

Nov. 6, 1882. JAMES E. ROSE
Commissioner.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb circuit court, in a cause wherein Jacob Somers is plaintiff and Charles Klotz, John Reisch, Mary Reisch, Charles M. Lovington and the Singer Manufacturing Company are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of eight hundred seventy-four dollars and fifty cents, with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at public sale, to the highest bidder, on Saturday, the 23d day of December, A. D. 1882, between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and four o'clock p. m. of said day, at the door of the court house in DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate, situated in DeKalb county, in the state of Indiana, and described as follows, to-wit: Town lots numbered sixty-nine (69) and seventy (70) in the western addition to the town of Auburn, in said county, except 44 feet wide north and south, by 132 feet east and west in length in the southwest corner of said lot 69. If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and cost, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and cost. Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

J. W. BOYLE,
Sheriff of DeKalb county Indiana.

Sheriff's office, Auburn, Indiana, November 29th, 1882.

W. H. DILLS, Attorney for Plaintiff.

—Wood choppers are grinding the ax and filing the saw preparatory to getting in their winter supply of fuel.

—Buck Allen, the veteran livery man, has been adding some fine horses to his stock, and turns out nobby rigs.

—Commissioners court is in session this week and, of course, there is the usual amount of miscellaneous business on hand.

—The laborer, mechanic and banker all exclaim in one chorus, that Schaab & Beugnot sell the cheapest of any place in town.

—G. C. Ralston has been appointed receiver of the stock of goods belonging to I. Ochs. The goods are said to be worth $60,000.

—Bill Sheffer has abandoned the harness trade for the present and devotes his time to making skate-straps for the juvenile.

—These long winter evenings can be passed pleasantly by subscribing for the Courier and looking over its columns carefully.

—Wes. Vandermark, who was taken to the asylum two years ago, was brought back yesterday, a permanent cure being impossible.

—Roy & Co., grocers at the south end, have erected a new barn and otherwise improved the premises which they recently purchased.

—The social of the Presbyterian church will be entertained at the residence of J. L. Davis, next Wednesday evening. Come everyone.

—The great conundrum now is:—"What will Sim. Tarney do, now that he is out of employment?" He is of age and you can ask him.

—If the rush continues at Schaab & Beugnot's it will be necessary for them to charter a train to keep up the stock of goods demanded by their customers.

Married.—At the residence of the bride's parents, in Hudson, Nov. 30th, 1882, by Rev. W. O. Butler, Mr. Alvaro Seery, of Waterloo, to Miss Emma Parnell.

—D. D. Snyder, esq., has erected a neat and commodious office to transact business for the hub and spoke and wagon factories. Dave likes things convenient.

—Dave Hampton has been improving his vacation by making numerous raids on the rabbits and quails in this vicinity. We learn that he is becoming quite a nimrod.

—McQuiston & Long will continue their auction sale of clothing, dry goods and notions during the coming week, every afternoon and evening. Everybody come and get some of the bargains they are giving.

—Thanksgiving is over and the turkeys breathe freer for a few days. Those who are over fond of this favorite bird can also "breathe freer" than they did on the day in question.

—Mrs. Larimore died at her home in St. Johns, one day this week. She was the wife of Dr. Larimore, formerly a practicing physician at this place, and both will be remembered by many of our early townspeople.

"That's a nobby fitting coat, my son," said an observant father to his oldest boy, "where did you get it?" "At the popular store of Schaab & Beugnot, father, and every one of my chums are saving money for the mates to it. They knock the packin' out of those la-de-dah tailor suits.

—This is the season of the year when the man with chapped hands and a frozen ear amuses the grocery loafer with stories of the rabbit, etc.

—The auction sale of clothing at McQuiston & Long's collected quite a crowd both day and evening. They disposed of nearly all their stock.

—Our readers can select any kind of a holiday present, in the line of goods handled that may be desired, by dropping in at Schaab & Beugnot's big store.

—The young men can make their ladies a handsome present by calling at the Courier office and getting them a pack of cards. We have the latest styles.

—The cold days and harsh winds should put everyone on their guard. What we are trying to get at is, that Schaab & Beugnot have some beautiful and durable overcoats for sale very cheap.

—The season for fur caps, capes and muffs is here, and every one who wintered them over without the festive moth doing its usual damage are wearing them.

—If you have a good horse or team that you would like to trade for territory in Michigan, for the sale of the celebrated Searight damper now is your chance. Geo. W. Weamer, Auburn, Ind.

—Those who are of a dramatic turn of mind might organize a club and give us an entertainment while we are waiting for some traveling humbug to rope us in.

Married.—At the Reformed church parsonage, in Waterloo, Nov. 30, 1882, by Rev. F. F. Christine, Mr. Franklin P. Myers to Miss Dehliah Stofer, both of Smithfield township.

—Vennor has it that December will be full of cold waves and the year will close extremely cold with plenty of snow. Remember this is what Vennor says, and we will not bet a nickel on his predictions.

—About fifteen couples from Butler participated in the Joie De Vie hop last Thursday evening. We hope they returned home well pleased with the courtesies extended them by the managers of the club.

—We are glad to hear that the ladies who arranged the Presbyterian Thanksgiving dinner were so considerate as to send articles of food to several families in town who are needy.

—Rev. McCord, officiating minister at the Presbyterian church, delivered a sermon Sunday evening expressly for the benefit of young men. We hope it will have the desired effect.

—The new coroner has had no business yet, but if parents do not keep their youths from jumping on and off of sleds his chances are very good when we get sleighing again.

—Joe McKay has purchased Getrost's interest of the store known in the past as the business house of Miller & Getrost. We hope his new undertaking will prove beneficial to him.

—Two dramatic companies are on the road rendering Uncle Tom's Cabin wherever they can get an audience. Please change cars at the Junction, gentlemen, and give us the go-by.

—We learn from some of the bankrupt members of the old band that Ora Shaffer's band, composed of six members, is doing some very creditable playing. The Courier moves that Ora brings 'em out.

—Charley Hoff jumped his job on the section at the opening of the recent cold snap. Upon pretty good authority, we are enabled to state that it takes nearly all of his time cutting wood to keep the baby warm.

—Mr. Ef. Watson is now buying corn "on his own hook" at the Wabash elevators. He will buy all of this kind of grain that our farmers will bring in and pay the highest market price, give good satisfaction, etc.

—A poor instrument or sewing machine is the most worthless piece of household furniture we can have. Always buy of home dealers and we can make arrangements to have our articles warranted. We heartily recommend Mr. Straw to our readers for square dealing, honesty and uprightness.

—There is a rumor abroad that Dr. Stough has been pardoned by the president. This will be good news to his many friends, as there are well grounded fears that his long confinement has been telling severely on his health of late.

—The Courier printed 1,000 envelopes to be distributed among the subscribers who agreed to pay monthly installments to the salary of Rev. McCord. We hope they will be used up rapidly, as prompt payments encourage ministers as well as others.

—J. A. Slaybaugh, dealer in shaved hickory handles of all descriptions, is pushing work forward in a business-like manner. He is a splendid judge of timber and has experienced men employed to execute the work. When at Waterloo, call and see him.

—Buy a Steinway Piano. The best in the world. J. C. Henry has one. It is a beauty.

Wanted.—Agents in every town in the state of Michigan, to sell Searight's return-flue self-cleaning drum dampers. This is the job for all if they want to make big money from now until spring. County and township rights for sale. Apply immediately to Geo. W. Weamer, Auburn, Ind.

—Yesterday, Dec. 6, was the day to view the transit of Venus across the sun's face. As these transits are rare they are watched with a great deal of interest.

—Billy Little moved his "truck" to Corunna Monday, and will open a shoe shop at that place. He is a good workman, and if the location will support a business of this kind both he and the citizens of our sister town can go well "healed."

—The Joie De Vie dance association held the largest hop of the season last Thursday evening. About forty couples with merry hearts and nimble limbs participated in the enjoyment, and now this club asks the other two for a belt with the word "Eureka" inscribed thereon in gilt letters.

—We are now having the shortest days and longest nights of the year. The very shortest will be December 21, as winter begins on that day at 4:45 in the afternoon; or, we may say, at that time the sun has reached its greatest apparent distance south of the equator, and then begins its northward journey.

—The teachers' institute for Smithfield and Union, held at Waterloo, last Saturday, was very well attended. Trustee Hague, of this township, and Mr. Gfeller, trustee of Smithfield, were both present and took a lively interest in the work. Nearly all the teachers were present and did all they could to make it a success.

—The north end of town was considerably excited last Sunday over the burning of a chimney at W. H. Dills' residence. Ed. Smith, a neighbor over-the-way, was so enthusiastic that he stood upon the corner and yelled fire until he was compelled to succumb to the "wind works" which men use so extravagantly on an occasion of this kind.

—The choir at the Presbyterian church now consists of Miss Flora Hoffman, organist; Jessie Espy and Rosa Shaffer, alto; Emma Rother and Laura Ensley soprano. The gentlemen are Mr. Miller and Mr. McCord, bass, with E. J. Coder for tennor. It makes a good team and we congratulate the church goers on having so able a choir.

—The temperance meeting held at the Presbyterian church last Friday evening, was managed and conducted by Mrs. J. H. Ehlers. Mrs. Lotta Osgood entertained the audience with a selection of reading embracing the subject of temperance. Another meeting will be held next week, and the programme is promised to be instructive and entertaining.

—John Brandon died Sunday Dec. 3, 1882, at the residence of his son Isaac Brandon, and was buried in the cemetery here Monday. Mr. Brandon was among the oldest inhabitants of the county and was always an industrious and honored citizen. For several years past he has been confined to the house and many of our citizens had almost forgotten him. He had reached the age of over 85 years.

—Christmas is near at hand and the little ones' mind is all consumed with the thoughts of what "Santa Clause" will bring them. Let every parent manage some way to save a few dimes to make these juvenile hearts happy on the morning in question. For a little boy or girl to rise early in the morning and find the shoe and stocking empty it creates a feeling of disappointment far beyond words to describe.

—We do not wish to dictate nor have parents raise their children under our government, but it would be well if they knew where their boys were Saturdays and Sundays. Last Sunday the ice on Cedar Creek was crowded with young hoodlums, skating, sliding, falling into air-holes, etc. One of these cold, frosty days, when the remainder of the family are seated around the fire-side, they need not be surprised if their son is brought home on a shutter, caused from skating over thin ice.

—Thanksgiving passed by with the usual formalities generally indulged in upon that day. The saloons were all "closed," and the chimes of the different church bells were heard from every part of the town. Services in the several churches were well attended, and the people of Auburn remembered with grateful hearts that we have had good health, abundant harvests, that labor has been rewarded exceedingly well, that new avenues of trade have been opened, and accordingly gave the entire day in returning thanks to their Divine Benefactor.

—Jake Nye, the Corunna horse jockey, came over here Saturday and traded Shad Rhodenbaugh a "mule" for a horse. They changed harness in front of the Courier office to a large and laughing crowd, composed of all kinds of citizens. The cold chills played tag up and down Shad's spinal column while he was arranging the crupper about the "mule's" hair-switch, but by kind words and the advantage of extraordinary long arms he succeeded. Shad disliked to see his "mule" bare-footed such cold weather and he broke for the nearest blacksmith shop and put up $1.25 for a set of shoes—just $1.24 more than the "mule" is worth. Both are satisfied, however, and we hope the "mule" will be comfortable and contented under the guiding hand of its new master.

People Here and There.

Geo. Larimore was on the streets Saturday.

Sol. Barney, of Spencerville, was in town Tuesday.

Charley Schaab will make a visit to Ohio this week.

Fred. Davis left Tuesday for another trip on the road.

We noticed Rev. Norris on the streets yesterday.

Erv. Scott and family have returned from their Ohio visit.

Eliza Shaffer passed through town on his way from Ohio Sunday.

B. L. Duncan and M. Gruster, of Waterloo, were in town Monday.

C. M. Philips, of Waterloo, was in town last Thursday on legal business.

John Butt, our future recorder, came down on a flying visit Saturday.

We notice Frank Griswold on the streets this week. Thought he'd gone west.

J. A. Shutt and wife, of Spencerville, looked through the Courier office Tuesday.

M. B. Willis and family spent Sunday at the farm residence of I. D. Britton, near Corunna.

Our friend John Robbins, the jolly hardware drummer, was shaking hands with the boys Monday.

Rev. W. L. Meese goes to Michigan the last of this week in the interest of the Searight damper.

Hank Brandon, who has been away from home for several years, was called here by the death of his father.

Joe. Williamson, of Corunna, was in town last week. We hear that he is negotiating for the Cabin saloon.

Samuel Seydel, of Sedan, called on us Monday, as did also Sim. Duck, the leading merchant of Hamilton.

Kade. McMillen, a lightning jerker at the Butler telegraph office, was the guest of recorder Boland Tuesday.

Frank Beimer has moved his family to this place and we hear that William will soon come back from the west and locate here.

Miss Jennie Francis, of Waterloo, was visiting in the family of W. H. McIntyre, esq., and other friends in town last week.

Hank Shoemaker, of Waterloo, has been working for Obe Cool for several weeks and will probably make this his future home.

Geo. Weamer is home this week after a short stay in Michigan, where he has been looking up the interests of the Searight heater.

Our old friend Daniel Lintz made a friendly call on the Courier this week and now we are using some of the finest butter on record.

Abe Canon, well known here, was in town last week. Abe is one of the finest painters in the State, but is at present engaged in buying lumber.

Old Mrs. Berringer, who had her limb broken some time ago, is yet confined to bed, and rumor has it that she will never be able to use it again.

Frank Borst, son-in-law of L. J. Miller, esq., has moved from Corunna to this place and will assist Mr. Tomlinson in the duties connected with the auditor's office.

The many friends of Will Shaffer will be sorry to learn that he has been dangerously ill with inflammatory rheumatism, but at last accounts was some better.

The friends of Mrs. Bodine will regret to learn that she is rapidly losing her eyesight, caused from old age. Her friends entertain hopes, however, of her getting "second sight."

Among our callers last week was our sturdy old democratic friend Dr. J. M. Lawrence, of Newville. A democratic sanctum that cannot feel a ray of sunshine at his approach ought to shut up shop at once.

Byron Grube called in to see us Saturday. In the most quiet way he had sold out in Keyser township and moved to Steuben county where he has bought a fine farm and will make it his future home. Byron is one of our intelligent young farmers and we can assure the people of Steuben that they have gained a good citizen by the change.

—In this issue of the Courier will be found a circular reading in behalf of our young friend Thos. H. Sprott. We take it upon ourselves to recommend Tom in the business he is engaged in, and can honestly say to our readers that the companies he is laboring for are substantial and reliable.

—The Thanksgiving dinner at the Presbyterian church was a success. It netted the society $58.00. It also advanced the ladies of the society still higher in public opinion as providers of good things eatable and drinkable. They dish up things in such nice style, so nicely cooked and so politely do they serve their patrons that even a pampered editor can sit down to such a table and be totally unable to grumble. In short as a well known poet said:

"Nothing sweeter or better
E'er smoked from an oven, or circled a platter."

And they deserve a good deal of praise for their energy and the business tact they show in the management of their work. They have well deserved the liberal patronage they received.

Notice.—There will be a meeting of the North Eastern Agricultural Ass'n at Winslow's Hall, Waterloo, Thursday, Dec. 14, 1882, at 1 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of taking into consideration and discussing several questions pertaining to the general welfare of the agricultural interests of this county and vicinity. All are invited.
By order of the president,
A. R. Stevens, Sec'y.

—Mr. Meese sold the right to Searight's Drum Dampers to four counties last Thursday, three on Friday, and three on Saturday. He and Mr. Searight both sold Marshall county on the same day. They are proving a great success. Mr. Meese has put quite a number of them on coal stoves and they do finely.

—Gents, if you wish to make your wife or daughter a holiday present buy one of those nobby camp rockers at Snyder & Culbertson's.

—Holiday presents are annually sought for. But it is often difficult to find appropriate and inexpensive articles of real value that will be kept, used and appreciated by a friend. Among these we would make favorable mention of the Noyes Dictionary Holders and Noyes Handy Tables. Apply to L. W. Noyes, 99 West Monroe St., Chicago, for an illustrated circular and greatly reduced prices.

—F. B. Straw, the champion music man, is making things hum in his line of trade. Monday he sold a piano, organ and two sewing machines. His instruments are bound to sell—handles nothing but the best.

Died.—Catherine Sweigood, born in Summit county, Ohio; married to Henry Dickerhoof in 1851; moved to DeKalb county in 1855; aged 51 years, 7 months and 11 days; mother of nine children — seven dead. Funeral services at Webster school-house; buried in Webster graveyard.

Ed. Courier: I desire, through the columns of your excellent paper, to thank my friends and all who gave me their sympathy and kind services during the illness and funeral ceremonies of my late lamented wife, who departed this life on Nov. 25, 1882. To each and all I desire to express my sincere and heartfelt thanks for their kindness in thus helping to lighten the burden, which it has pleased our Heavenly Father to visit upon me, and they may feel assured that their sympathy in my bereavement is highly prized.
Respectfully,
Henry Dickerhoof.

THE LITTLE BANANA PEEL.

ROBERT J. BURDETTE.

Like a bar of the beaten gold
  I gleam in the summer's sun,
I am little, I know, but I think I can throw
  A man that will weigh a ton.
I send out no challenge bold,
  I blow me no vaunting horn,
But foolish is he who treadeth on me;
  He'll wish he had ne'er been born.
Like the flower of the field vain man
  Goeth forth at the break of day,
But when he shall feel my grip on his heel
  Like the stubble he fadeth away;
For I lift him high up in the air,
  With his heels where his head ought to be,
With a down coming crash he maketh his mash,
  And I know he's clear gone upon me.
I am scorned by the man who buys me;
  I am modest and quiet and meek;
Though my talents are few, yet the work that I do
  Has oft made the cellar doors creak.
I'm a blood red republican born,
  And a nihilist fearless I be;
Though the head wear a crown, I would bring its pride down,
  If it set its proud heel upon me.

LADY DELIGHT.

A golden haired little girl in a purple dress—you would not understand perhaps, when you heard them call her Lady Delight, until you observed her graceful, exquisitely modest manner, and heard the fine enunciation of her speech. Hardly the place you would look for either—a tumble-down hut, half fisherman's home, half farm-house, on the flats of Jersey. It was but a brown dot upon the wide yellow sands, where the blue sea turned a line of white surf for miles in a line upon the bare salt shore, and yet there were other brown dots, with here and then a more pretentious house, all the way to the town over the hill in the hollow—Belletown, a rather gay seaside resort. At least, it had a pretty good hotel, and summer boarders from the neighboring cities. The hotel was the Larch house, where Lady Delight's father, Skipper Doyle, sold his fish frequently; but his daughter never came thither, and could not have learned her nice speech and gentle manners of the city people. Her neighbors remarked this, and observed that she was "like her mother," who was intelligent and refined. The present Mrs. Doyle was not intelligent and refined.

She was energetic and unrepressed—or, as the neighbors said, "driving and scolding," and perhaps it is not to be wondered at when I add that the good woman had seven sons and honestly endeavored to do her duty to them. They were not like Delight, but they were her brothers, and she loved them all, from the 3-year-old twins to Dan, who was fifteen, and old enough to raise the potatoes and catch the fish when his father was sick—as occasionally happened. The family's only other sources of income were derived from the prodigious labors of Mrs. Doyle, who raised chickens, cultivated asparagus, made butter, and sewed straw. It was strange that in none of these undertakings Delight had ever been allowed to share much. Mrs. Doyle, though the mother of many children, had no taste for the care of them.

"I can't putter around all day with the children, Delight. You have a knack at getting along with them. Just keep them from under my feet to-day, for I've got to get the eggs and asparagus to market, wash, churn and finish off a dozen of them straw hats."

So Delight, winning, persuasive, kept the four littlest boys under her rule, while she ran with them up and down the yellow sands in the bland summer weather. When she was 16, taller and a little more sedate, she often chanced to meet Rick Revere, who strolled with them, or took them out in his boat. The Reveres were more prosperous than the Doyles; they had more fishing boats, a larger farm, and then Grandma Revere was Delight's godmother. It was she who gave Delight her pretty purple dresses—in the autumn a fine merino, in the spring an organdie; taught her to sew exquisitely, and encouraged her taste for flowers. She was a splendid old lady, portly and brave in snowy caps; and Rick had her blue eyes and handsome presence. Skipper Doyle's family always liked him; but after Lady Delight was 16, his firm tread was often heard on the bare floors, his ringing laugh under the low roof. He walked on the shore with her sometimes when the children were not with her, or the two rowed away toward the sunset and parted lingeringly in the moonlight.

"You'll be taking Delight away from us some day," Mrs. Doyle remarked, fixing her black eyes on him sharply.

"I hope so," he replied, fearlessly; and she was fain to turn away, half fretted, half flattered.

"What shall I do with the children when Delight marries?—Tom, and Ned, and Ben, and Will, and—the—baby!" for soon there were eight sons under the roof.

But, come what might, Lady Delight never fretted nor frowned. She embroidered the baby's flannels, swung it to sleep in a hammock made of a fishing net, played with the twins, taught the others how to spell, and sewed for the whole family. Only she must have her evening stroll with Rick.

"Bunny'll sleep, mother. I've had him out in the fresh air all the afternoon. And I'll finish the little jacket for Ben in the morning!" and the sunset would gleam across the golden head and purple dress as Lady Delight flitted away to meet her lover.

"It's plain enough to be seen the way things are going; and I'll have my sister Roxy come and live with me murmured Mrs. Doyle. "I'm not going to be left in the lurch this way."

So Roxy Reed came from her own crowded father's family to make one of Skipper Doyle's. She had curly black hair, she was plump, she was coquettish. Mrs. Doyle plumed herself on her young relative's graces. As for Miss Roxy, she set her cap instantly at Rick.

"He's engaged to Delight" said, Mrs. Doyle, in a low tone.

"I don't care," answered Roxy. "He's the only good-looking fellow around here, and I'll get him if I can."

Delight overheard this conversation; but Rick did not. He did not recognize Roxy Reed as bold and unscrupulous; the red cheeks and dimpled shoulders and veil of curls cast a glamour over his eyes. And at first it was only offering civility to one of the family when he took Roxy out in his little white boat, the Petrel, which was large enough to hold but two. But the girl was full of animal spirits and buoyant life, which was exceedingly attractive; it was plain that Rick was soon fascinated.

"She is full of fun, and witty—capital company. I don't see why you don't like her," he said to Delight.

"I did not say that I did not like her," answered Lady Delight, with gentle surprise.

"No, but you never seem to care for her society. You hardly spoke a word all last evening; just rocked that dreadful baby—"

"The baby isn't well," interrupted Delight, "and mother is worn out with toothache."

Privately, she thought Roxy might have taken care of the child, under the circumstances.

"Oh! I beg your pardon, but you know I'm not partial to babies. At least I prefer them asleep, looking like slumbering angels. By George! but it's fun enough just to hear Roxy laugh."

This speech hurt little Lady Delight. It did not sound like Rick, who she knew was fond of children, and who had always been tender and considerate. But she only said: "Yes, she had noticed Roxy's hearty laugh," and "No, she could not go out in the 'Petrel' to-night, and certainly he might take Rox."

Soon, so soon, there was an end of the sunset walks and moonlight rows. Rick and Delight drifted apart, and she never lifted a finger to detain him. "I never knew why he loved me," she said to herself, "and now I do not know why he leaves me."

She was always outwardly calm and gentle, though sometimes, at sight of Rick and Roxy together, she would tremble like a leaf. They had come to avoid each other—to look no more into each other's faces; it was far less pain to Lady Delight at least, to be apart than to be near. And Rick—Rick knew he was wrong. I can only say in his excuse, that he was not the first man bewitched by a wayward and handsome girl from allegiance to his true love. He seldom came to the house, but Roxy met him on the shore, by Brant Rock, where the little Petrel was moored. If Mrs. Doyle found her sister of less assistance than she expected, she made no complaint.

"Let him take Roxy, if he is such a fool as not to know that Delight is worth two of her. I shall be suited," with a pursing of the lips and a grimace of the narrow forehead.

All the world about Lady Delight could see how matters ran. The brothers, who seemed too rough or too young to understand, were very kind to her. The little boys hunted all day for great bunches wild of flowers, with which they burdened her, for the sweetness of everything seemed gone to poor Lady Delight. Ben, next older, who hated to work in the garden, faithfully hoed her pinks and tied up her vines. And Dan openly resented Roxy's interference in his sister's affairs.

"Mighty takin', she thinks she is, with her hair kinked up, an' her tongue always a waggin'! Handsome! She ain't no more handsome than a horned pout," and Dan spoke sincerely; in his prejudiced eyes Roxy was in no ways attractive.

"She won't never cut me no bread an' butter, an' if she slaps Bunny again when mother ain't lookin,' I'll tear her old ruffled gown!" put in Tom, one of the twins, and Lady Delight was too weary to reprove the child for bad manners. She only smiled a faint response as Dan's brown hand stroked her golden hair, and Tom hung around her waist heavy and loving.

But one night Roxy went down to the boat mooring, and flounced back about 8 o'clock evidently out of sorts. It transpired the next morning that Rick Revere had not met her, for word chanced to come that he was sick.

"They do say it's small pox, but may be it ain't," said the boatman, who lounged in the doorway and chatted with Skipper Doyle.

But it was that dreadful disease, which Rick Revere had somehow in his intercourse with seafaring men contracted. The town authorities interfered and obliged him to be removed from his home to a little stone house, far remote from any other habitation, which stood far down the shore, whither his proud, adoring old grand-mother went to attend him. She had had the disease in her youth, and she would not have Rick left to strangers.

"The small-pox!" shrieked Roxy. "It's catching And he was holding my hand and I was sitting on his knee only night before last. If I haven't taken it, I hope I never shall set eyes on him again that's all!"

"Well, you ain't one of the faithful kind such as we read about, be ye?," remarked Skipper Doyle, dryly.

"I wouldn't have my complexion spoiled by small-pox for all the fellows in Christendom!" returned Roxy, tartly.

"Well, you'd better be a little useful as well as ornamental, since Delight has walked herself off her feet with teething baby!" responded the Skipper who made no secret of not liking his wife's young relative.

For lady Delight was lying prostrate in her little white chamber above. The last fierce excitement had utterly sapped her waning strength. It was not the teething baby, it was an aching heart which had so worn on her. She was weeping now, in a silent and breathless way, among her pillows.

"Lonely, suffering—and he will die, and never know that I loved him better than she!"

And now her labors redoubled by Delight's illness, and dissatisfied with Roxy, since affairs had not turned out as she wished, Mrs. Doyle fell out with her sister.

"You've just played the mischief, an' done no good at all since you've been here, Roxy Reed. You'd better just pack up and go home!"

"I will that!" pouted Roxy, and forthwith was as good as her word.

Roxy was soon gone, but for three long weeks Rick Revere lay terribly ill in the little stone house far away.

Secretly, for Lady Delight's sake, Skipper Doyle exerted himself to obtain daily news of the sick man. Only his old grandmother's intelligence and faithful care saved his life and prevented serious disfiguration. They heard, at last, that the red flag had been taken down from the door of the stone cottage. Rick was better—had recovered, and come home.

Lady Delight, a very pale and gentle lady, indeed, had come down from her tiny white chamber, and was going quietly about the house. The family had greatly missed her finishing touches of taste of neatness in the little home.

She had filled the windows with boxes of plants from her winter threatened little garden, and was sitting by the fire, mending her mittens, when looking up, she saw Rick Revere coming into the dooryard. He was bending before the cold wind.

She ran to the door.

"Oh, why did you come out so soon—in this cold weather? You will take cold and die!" she said.

"I had better, I think, don't you?" asked Rick, taking her hand and looking into her eyes.

Lady Delight remembered.

"Roxy has gone away," she said.

"I did not come to see Roxy. I don't care to see her again, ever? Oh, my little Lady Delight, in the long nights so near my death, I learned that I did not care for her a jot. I loved nobody but you. In those dark weeks I have wept like a home-sick child for a sight of your purple dress and golden head. But I know how I have treated you. Can you take me back?"

"I hoped you would come," said Lady Delight, simply. "So I have just stayed."

A Chicago Scandal.

Milwaukee Special.

A great sensation was caused at Chicago and here by the arrest of D. H. Hale, former manager of the Chicago Clearing-house, and his wife, on the charge of robbing several jewelry establishments in this city. Hale belongs to the best families in Chicago, and formerly moved in the highest social and financial circles of that city. Lately, however, he has been ostracised, and lost his Clearing-house position because of a scandal growing out of his second marriage. Some years ago his house in Chicago was robbed. The burglar was arrested, and is still in Joliet. During his trial, Hale became enamored with the burglar's wife, and is said to have taken her to his home and installed her as governess. His wife soon died, and he married the burglar's wife, the latter having secured a divorce from her husband. It happened that not only is the woman's burglar husband, who was her second matrimonial mate, in the penitentiary, but her sister and sister's husband are also in similar institutions.

After marrying Hale she was charged with robbing a jewelry store, but the affair was compromised. The arrest at that time caused a tremendous social sensation in Chicago. Since that time Hale has been out of employment. He came here, with his wife, a few days ago, to endeavor to secure a position as assistant cashier of the Merchanst's Exchange Bank, made vacant by the discharge of Lesaulnier, recently arrested for the seduction of the daughter of one of our most prominent citizens.

While Hale was making negotiations, his wife visited several leading jewelry stores, examining a large amount of diamonds and other valuables. She ordered expensive jewelry sent to various parts of the city, giving her name as Mrs. Derby, and saying she would pay when the goods were delivered. Messengers sent with the goods could not find her. This led to suspicions, and the jewelers in examining their stock closely found a considerable amount of valuable jewelry missing. Detectives searched for the women, and caught her just as she was leaving the city in a train. Her husband was shortly after arrested. The women made a full confession to your correspondent, stating that she had thrown the jewelry in the railway station stove. The damaged remains of the stolen property were found where she put it. She asserts that her husband had no hand in or knowledge of the matter.

A Discussion of Womanly Beauty.

New York Sun.

The appearance here of a reigning professional beauty from London is very naturally provoking just now much discussion of the loveliness of American women as compared with that displayed by our fair visitor. Both the men and the women who attend her theatrical representations examine Mrs. Langtry critically to see if she possesses a sort of beauty superior to what we art accustomed to at home, and wherein it differs from the native type in which we reasonably take so much pride and find so much delight.

They do not have any novelty revealed to them. The delicate complexion, the soft and clear eyes, the silky hair with its mellow tints, the willowy figure, the rounded contours, are all familiar to us from frequent observation of our own young and beautiful women. With most people, with most pretty women especially, the feeling is very likely one of disappointment or self-satisfaction after the first critical examination. They are not afraid that our feminine loveliness would suffer from comparison with the beauty which has dazzled London society and won the admiration of London artists.

Yet Mrs Langtry has one thing not common here among women, whether beautiful or plain. That is a sweet, melodious voice, a lovely intonation, and a speech low and soft, but clear as crystal. Her manner of utterance has few of the peculiarities which our imitators of English form think it necessary to affect. It is easy, musical and natural, and her pronunciation is delightful. It would not be possible for us, we regret to say, to assert the same things with truth of the voice and speech of the greater number of beautiful American women. And yet therein consists one of the most delightful and most winning of feminine charms—a charm so great, so essential even, that otherwise perfect womanly loveliness is inexpressibly marred by the lack of it.

We do not fear to say that our handsome women need not hesitate to put their features in comparison with those of any example of foreign feminine beauty which has yet appeared on our shores.

General Sherman is immensely proud of his daughters, and admires them with a heartiness that is beautiful to see. He thinks what "Racho" does not know about a book is not worth knowing—that Miss Sherman is the most capable of her sex; that Mrs. Thackera is the most facinating creature, and Mrs. Fitch the best woman that ever lived. The Sherman's are, in fact, nice and unpretending, every one of them.

A woman who knowingly marries a man who gets drunk, must prepare for the worst.

Mr. Oliver Ames, Lieutenant Governor-elect of Massachusetts, although a man of great wealth, was trained to work, and did work for years in his father's shops as a common journeyman shovelmaker. The proficiency he attained as a mechanic is shown by the fact that for several years he alone made all the prize shovels and other tools exhibited by the firm at fairs in this and other countries. His example is being followed by his son, now 20 years old, who daily works at the bench and anvil.

Hamlet in Street Clothes.

Maze Edwards, manager for Edwin Booth, thus describes their appearance at Waterbury last Winter, in street costumes:

When I found the baggage with the costumes had not arrived, I was just going to throw myself into the river, when I thought I would go and tell Mr. Booth about it, and bid good-bye to some of the people who had always thought a good deal of me, before killing myself. To my astonishment, Mr. Booth took it coolly. He said, inasmuch as the people were in the hall, he would make a few remarks to them about the accident, and then they would go on and play three acts of "Hamlet" in the clothes they had on. And so it was fixed up that way.

Well, the thought of Hamlet in a short-tailed coat and tight pants almost made me sick, and when Mr. Booth came on the stage looking like an Episcopal minister, with a Knight Templar's cheese knife that he had borrowed, I couldn't think of anything but Hamlet. I forgot all about his clothes, and I believe if he had only had on a pair of sailor pants and a red flannel fireman's shirt, that the people would only have seen Hamlet. I tell you he is the greatest actor that ever lived. The people sat perfectly still, and seemed wrapped up in Booth. That is, they were when they did not look at the other fellows.

But when they took in Laertes, with a short ham-fat coat on, a pair of la-de-dah pants, and a pancake hat, it seemed to me I could hear them smile. And the King, Hamlet's step-father, he was a sight. Imagine a King with a cut-away checkered coat, a Pullman car blanket thrown over his shoulders for a robe, and a leg of a chair for scepter, mashed on a queen with a traveling dress and a gray woolen basque with buttons on it. And think of Polonius with a linen duster and straw hat with a blue riben on! O, it made me tired. Ophelia was all right enough. She had on some crazy clothes that she had been traveling in, and we got some straw out of a barn, and some artificial flowers off the bonnets, and she pulled through pretty well.

But the Ghost. You would have died to see the Ghost. He had on one of those long hand-me-down ulster overcoats with a buckle in the back as big as a curry-comb, and the belt was hanging down on both sides. The boys got him a green mosquito bar to put over it, and with a stuffed club for a scepter, he fell over a chair and then came on. I should have laughed if I had been on my death-bed, when he said to Hamlet, "I am thy father's ghost." He looked more like a drummer for a wholesale confectionery house with a sort of tin skimmer on his head, and I believe the audience would have gone wild with laughter if it had not been for Mr. Booth. I don't believe you could get him to laugh on the stage for a million dollars. He just looked at the Ghost as though it was a genuine one, and the audience looked at Booth, and forgot all about the ulster, and the ghost's pants being rolled up at the bottom.

It was probably the greatest triumph that an actor ever had, for Mr. Booth to compel the vast audience to forget the ludicrous surroundings and think only of the character he was portraying. I wouldn't have missed the night's performance for a thousand dollars, and when, at 10 o'clock, I heard the boys getting the trunks up stairs, I was almost sorry. The last two acts were played with costumes, but they were no better performed than the first. Still, I think, on the whole, I had rather the baggage would be there. It makes a manager feel better.

Belles of Ancient Days.

Boston World.

Undoubtedly there is much idle talk about the wonderful extravagance of ladies of the present day, their pursuit of constantly charging styles and the luxuries demanded by those who can, or think they can, afford the expense. One would be led to suppose, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, that these were things of modern growth. But just look at the "style" they used to put on in early ages and their enormous extravagance.

We are told that the ladies of Lesbos slept on roses whose perfume had been artificially heightened. And in those times court maidens powdered their hair with gold.

Marc Anthony's daughter did not change her dress half a dozen times a day, as do the Saratoga graces, but she made the lampreys in her fish pond wear earrings.

The dresses of Lollia Paulina, the rival of Aggrippina, were valued at $2,664,480. This did not include her jewels. She wore at one supper $1,562,500 worth of jewels, and it was a plain citizen's supper. The luxury of Poppæa, beloved by Nero, was equal to that of Lollia.

The women of the Roman empire indulged in all sorts of luxuries and excesses, and these were revived under Napoleon I. in France. Mme. Tallien bathed herself in a wash of strawberries and raspberries, and had herself rubbed down with sponges dipped in milk and perfumes.

Ovid says that in his day girls were taught to smile gracefully.

The beauties of ancient times were just as vain as modern belles, and spent the greater part of the day at their toilet. The use of cosmetics was universal among them. Aspasia and Cleopatra (models of female beauty, it is said,) both used an abundance of paint, and each wrote a treatise on cosmetics. Cleopatra used bears' grease to keep her hair from falling out. Roman ladies were so careful of their complexions that to protect them they wore masks. The Athenian woman of antiquity were very studious of their attitudes and actions, and thought a hurried and sudden step a sign of rusticity.

We have certain styles of beauty nowadays; so had the Greeks. They went wild over the "ideal chin," neither sharp nor blunt, but gently undulating in its outline, and losing itself gradually and almost insensibly in the fulness of the neck. The union of the two eyebrows was esteemed by the Romans as a beauty. It is said they admired the air of dignity it gives to the face.

An Albanian beauty of to-day presents a rather striking appearance. She is, as a rule, coifed with seed pearls and coins, and enveloped in a black serge pelisse. She uses paint on her face profusely, and her taste runs to cherry lips and cheeks and jet black eyebrows strongly drawn. An Albanian bride discards paint for a while, and if wealthy, wears a suit something like this: Rose-colored under-robes, with an over-robe of dark-green velvet, the idea being taken from a rose-bud half opened in its leaves. Thus arrayed, the girl of handsome features is said to look really bewitching.

The Tatars despise prominent nasal appendages, and the woman who has the smallest nose is estimated the most charming, but to outside babarians she is a perfect fright.

The women of Spiti, in India, wear tunics and trousers of woolen stuff, with large boots, partly of leather, partly of blanket, which come up to the knee, and which they are fond of taking of at any time. In order to get greater warmth, they often put a quantity of flour into these boots beside their legs. Their taste in regard to ornaments runs much to all sorts of rings, including nose-rings.

A trypical woman in the interior of Africa if thus described: "Her naked negro skin was leathery, coarse and wrinkled; her figure was tottering and knocked-kneed; her thin hair hung in greasy locks; on her wrists and ankles she had almost an arsenal of metal links of iron, brass and copper, strong enough to bind a prisoner in his cell. About her neck were hanging chains of iron, strips of leather, strings of wooden balls, and heaven knows what more lumber."

GILDED CRIME.

Indianapolis Journal.

To the everlasting discredit of the intelligence of the people, the worship of crime still goes on. It was bad enough, last March, when a great many distinguished Missourians further distinguished themselves by blubbering over the remains of the thief and assassin, Jesse James. It was trying enough to have his praises sung by adolescent reporters and his coffin bedewed with the tears of empty-headed women, to say nothing of the "eulogy" said to be pronounced over his grave. His bloody deeds were made the theme of countless paragraphs, and, as is always the way in such cases, numberless acts of valor and chivalry were ascribed to him which were as foreign to every impulse of his nature, and as impossible to the promptings of his heart, as could be conceived. It has been said that he was a model husband and father, indulgent to the last degree, and invariably kind and courteous. The claim is well nigh incredible; but admitting it to be fully true, as claimed, it only admits one ray of sunshine into as darkened and crime-stained a life as history can produce. This kind and indulgent husband and father at home, was a wild beast when abroad, carrying terror and bloodshed wherever he went. The very hand which fondled his own babe cruelly wrung the hearts of a hundred as innocent and tender as that of his own. His phenomenal gentleness and kindness were all shut in behind him when he closed the door of his own house to seek out and violate the firesides of his neighbors. Away with the sentimental rot that clothes such a monster with any virtues. The reigning purpose of his existence was to steal—to feed and clothe himself through the exertions of his neighbors. He was at heart a thief, and his ignominy as a thief must be added that of a cowardly murderer. In the dead of night, usually, he came upon his unsuspecting victims, and, day or night, always endeavored to find them unarmed; and it was under such circumstances as these that his deeds of blood were performed. Stripped to the naked truth, Jesse James was no more than an assassin and thief, differing from others of his class the world over only in the fact that he was more lucky in escaping the well-merited penalty of his crimes.

When Jesse James fell at the hand of a fellow assassin, who had learned his ideas of honor under his immediate preceptorship, there remained his brother Frank, presumably possessed of the same rare qualities which made Jesse great and famous. From the encomiums showered upon the memory of the former, it would naturally be inferred that the latter would rise to the exigencies of the occasion and perform prodigies of valor in revenge for the murder of Jesse. But he did nothing of the kind.

After skulking about in remote portions of the country, and only making his rare appearance thoroughly disguised, he realized that his career was at an end, and that he could no longer hope to prosecute his schemes of plunder without greater personal danger than he cared to face. So, like a whipped spaniel, he crept up to the authorities and "voluntarily" surrendered. His amazement may be imagined when, instead of being clapped into jail and treated as his infamous deeds deserved, he was regarded as a hero and was made the recipient of attention. Naturally he took to this very kindly, and since then has played his part to perfection. A recent account says that he is "the lion of the hour." True, he is in jail; but his worshipers are so devoted that they have "destroyed the dreary monotony of his cell, and have filled the atmosphere with a fragrance entirely foreign to its surroundings." It is said also that "fresh vases of flowers are sent each morning by some lady admirer." Instead of ordinary diet, "the bandit sits down to the most sumptuous viands," and when he lays his princely form to sleep it is upon feathers, with a mahogany bedstead to make it appear home like. Colonel—they call him "Colonel" now—Frank has grown very pompous under such royal treatment, and no longer admits everybody to his presence. A card must be sent in, and then if he deigns to see the sender, he graciously signifies his condescension. In manners he is decidedly polite, and receives his company with a great deal of "grace." He is very fasty in his dress, and "a speck of dirt on his clothing seems to worry him greatly," and so on, ad nauseam.

Among the conspicuous people who have visited him are Gov. Crittenden, Gen. Joe Shelby, ex-Gov. James Johnson, ex-Congressman Phillips and Col. John Crisp. The shame put on the people of Missouri is all but complete. They have seen one of the murderous brothers followed to the grave as a hero, and eulogized as a saint in heaven. They are daily humiliated by the adulation bestowed upon the other, and when the Governor shall at last set him free through the gift of a pardon their degradation in the eyes of the world will be complete.

What can respectable society do to counteract the evil effects of such toadying to the meanest of criminals? It has come to such a pass that the eulogy of really noble deeds is relegated to Sunday-school books, and then sneered at as antiquated. Teachers of genuine heroism and morality are regarded as sentimentalists and visionaries, to be pitied rather than heeded. And, as if all this injury were not enough, the better sentiment of the land is insulted by the production of a senseless play founded on the evil deeds of these miscreants, and the youth of the land are to be further blinded and corrupted. The production of such a play calls for the unqualified condemnation of everybody who does not want the boys encouraged to grow up cut-throats and thieves. No honorable man should give encouragement to this thing. It can by no possibility have any dramatic merit, while its influence can not be beneficial. Such plays, that gild crime and throw the garb of respectability over the persons of the most infamous, deserve universal condemnation, and should speedily die of inanition. It is the production of such travesties on the drama that brings discredit upon the stage, and it would redound to the honor and benefit of the profession if such things were killed in their conception.

THE LOST BRIDEGROOM.

In a rugged and mountainous district of Wales is situated a mining village, noted for this little story which the miners tell to their children.

Years ago in the little village of—— there was an humble but neatly-kept cottage, where an old miner dwelt with his wife and only child—a son. And Alick was but a young boy when he first decended into the mines with his father.

One evening, as the old miner was returning home from a neighboring village, his attention was attracted by a little girl. She was weeping bitterly. A few broken, almost inarticulate words told that she had been deserted by her mother. The child, weary and hungry, had cried itself to sleep, and while she was sleeping, the unnatural parent had forsaken her.

The old man was touched by the incident. Raising her tenderly in his arms, he wended his way homeward. Entering the cottage he placed the light burden in his wife's lap saying: "God in His wisdom has seen fit to choose our home from all the other homes in the village to shelter this deserted child. Knowing your kind heart, wife, I did not fear to bring the little one to you."

The dame pressed the good man's hand affectionately in reply, and Amy—for so the child was called—was soon seated before a simple repast.

Alick, on his return from the parish school, welcomed the little girl with every expression of pleasure.

Years passed away, and Amy's childhood days were spent.

Without great claims to beauty, there was, nevertheless, a charm about her which all recognized.

The miner and his wife were not surprised when Alick one day asked them for their consent to make Amy his wife, and to this request they accorded their heartfelt blessing.

The day for the rustic nuptials was named, and was looked forward to as an occasion of general rejoicing. The happy day arrived, work was suspended that all might join in the merry-making.

Taking the hand of the trembling girl within his own, Alick, according to the long-established custom of the village, led the way to the little vine-covered church, where the parish priest blessed their love. Children strewed flowers by the way-side and sang gay songs. Each guest had made a modest offering, but to no one would Alick confide the nature of his gift, wishing, as he did, to excite an agreeable surprise.

When they had returned to the cottage Alick kissed his wife, telling her he would leave her but for a short season. He left the house, and, with one last, lingering look at the doorway where Amy stood waving a merry adieu, he hurried off in the direction of the old mines, and a curve in the road soon hid him from view. As his lithe figure disappeared Amy uttered a faint sigh, suggestive of a dull foreboding evil or the fullness of her mirthful joy.

Days passed, and search had been made everywhere. Weeks followed; then months. But the bridegroom did not return. Nor could his absence and strange disappearance be accounted for. No clew was gained by those who searched untiringly. At length hope was abandoned. The widowed bride clung tenaciously to one idea, which seemed almost like a folly; in life or death, she would see her husband again before she was called away from earth. This belief afforded her comfort, and the neighbors, while they did not share the conviction, humored her in the thought, and spoke regretfully of the sad changes that sorrow had wrought in her fresh young face,

Forty years were gone, and but for the sad, wistful face of old Amy, and the whispered stories of the peasantry, the unaccountable disappearance of Alick would have been forgotten. But the tale told in an under breath by many a hearth, was, that Alick had been carried off by an evil spirit, with whom he had held compact. Many even went so far as to say that his soul haunted the old cottage, and had been seen during stormy nights in the mountains. Amy indeed asserted that she often heard his voice calling her, and the light that burned always from nightfall until dawn in her casement told that her heart ever kept vigil over his fate.

The old cottage continued to be thought haunted by ghostly visitors, and because of this superstition none would occupy it. It gradually fell into decay. The women of the village rarely passed the dead miner's house without offering a prayer for the restless soul.

The old mines having been worked, it was at length determined that new excavations should be opened. Amid the operations a subterraneous murmur was heard mingling with the sound of the pick. Suddenly a wailing cry rent the air, and the earth seemed to tremble. Those above rushed in terror to the mouth of the pit, and the most fearless were about to descend, when the call-bell was rung violently. Every rope was at once put in use, while the miners were white and trembling with intense fear.

To every inquiry they accorded the most disconnected replies, such as "a man," "a demon," "a miracle!" At length from one old man they gathered that they had worked steadly to open communication between the new and old mine, but finding only a small obstruction at last a sturdy blow was made, and the dividing wall had given away; that when the cloud of dust had passed from before their astonished eyes they saw a young man; that he was lying upon a rocky bed; he seemed to be sleeping; that his cheeks looked fresh and fair, and that his lips were still red. Instead of approaching him they had fled in fright, filled with the belief that it was an evil spirit in human guise that they beheld.

The owner of the mine listened attentively. As the old man ceased he rushed forward exclaiming: "To the mine? To the mine!" Soon the truth was known. Ere many minutes three miners issued forth, bearing between them the body of the young man. With a feeling of irrepressible horror they laid him down upon the green sward. His clothes were old and indicated a style worn years and years ago; all were, however, in a perfect state of preservation. He seemed dressed as though for a fete. In his hand he held a box. It contained a gold cross, chain and medallion. Time had blackened these little pledges which the stranger had doubtless intended for some village maiden.

They were about to raise the body and bear it away for burial, when old Amy was seen approaching.

They made way for her, and those near at hand were struck by the singular expression of her face. Her eyes sparkled with new life, and her steps, usually so feeble, seemed almost to have gained the elasticity of youth. Waving them aside with an imposing dignity, she advanced directly toward the dead man. Kneeling, she parted the dark hair on his brow and murmured, in a tone of inexpressible love and tenderness, his name—"Alick!"

At once all was clear. In an instant the old people present recognized the companion of their youth. Again she spoke:

"Alick, friend of my childhood, my husband, I knew that we would meet again on earth."

As she ceased speaking, her head drooped lower and lower, until it sank upon his breast, as if in prayer.

At length the young men advanced to remove the body. Gently the women raised the figure of the forlorn woman. Seeing that she made no resistance, they bent over her, and found that she, too, was dead. Her loving vigil was at an end. The same grave holds them both, and many a sweet flower is laid upon it in remembrance of their fate, while the legend of their love is often recounted in the humble homes of the poor.

The Turn of Life.

The Science of Life by a Physician.

Between the years of forty and sixty a man who has properly regulated himself may be considered in the prime of life. His matured strength of constitution renders him almost impervious to the attack of disease, and experience has given soundness to his judgement. His mind is resolute, firm and equal, all the functions are in the highest order, he assumes mastery over business; builds up a competence on the foundation he has formed in early manhood, and passes through a period of life attended by many gratifications. Having gone a year or two past sixty, he arrives at a critical period in the road of existance; the river of death comes before him, and he remains at a stand still. But athwart this is a viaduct called "The Turn of Life," which, if crossed in safety, leads to the valley of "old age," round which the river winds, and then beyond without a boat or causeway effect its passage. The bridge is, however, constructed of fragile materials, and it depends upon how it is trodden wether it bend or break. Gout, apoplexy and other bad characters, are also in the vicinity to waylay the traveler and thrust him from the pass, but let him gird up his loins and provide himself with a fitter staff, and he may trudge on in safety with perect composure. To quit metaphor, "The Turn of Life," is a turn either into a prolonged walk or a grave. The system and powers having reached their utmost expansion, now begin to close like flowers at sunset or break down at once. One injudicious stimulant, a single fatal excitement, may force it beyond its strength, whilst a careful supply of props, and the withdrawal of all that tends to force a plant, will sustain it in beauty and vigor until night has entirely set in.

An Unknown Hero.

Harper's Young People.

Deep down in a mine, Wardley Colliery, Newcastle, England, there is a brave boy who deserves to be called a hero. In a situation of sudden peril he used precautions which prevented a dreadful explosion, simply by behaving with courage and presence of mind.

He noticed that his lamp flared up, a sure sign of the presence of dangerous gas. Had he hastily rushed away, his light might have burst through the wire gauze which surrounds a miner's lamp, and setting fire to the gas, caused a heart rending accident.

The lad did nothing so silly. When questioned by the superintendent as to how he had found out that there was gas in the neighborhood where he was at work, he replied, "Because my lamp flared."

"And what did you do then?" asked the gentleman.

"I took my pricker, and pulled down the wick, but the lamp still flared."

"Well, my boy, how did you manage then?"

"Why, I put the lamp inside my jacket, and covered it up tight, and the light went out."

Of course the lamp could not burn without air. To think of the right thing to do, and then promptly to do it, boys, that is what makes the difference between a common man and a hero. This little fellow, whose name is not mentioned—Mick, or Ted, or Jack—has in him the making of a grand man, cool, resolute and clever.

Fortunately there was an overseer near him; who, when he heard from the lad about his lamp, went bravely through the gas, in total darkness, and set open a door, the closing of which had forced the gas into the mainways of the mine.

Getting "Mashed" on a Train.

Nashville American.

As the train pulled out of Charleston, I looked around the car and saw that there were seven of us occupying whole seats, while the eighth was a pert looking girl about eighteen years old. I think the idea with the other six men was to get some sort of an excuse to share the young lady's seat. One offered to open the window, but found it open and fell back. A second offered her a book, but she had read it. A third handed her a newspaper, but she had the same issue. The fourth one was a drummer from Cincinnati. He pulled his cap down, picked up his grip, and went to the door and banged it as if he had just entered. Then, rushing along the isle, he plumped down beside the girl without a word, stowed his grip under his feet and pulled out a newspaper and began to read. It was ten minutes before he said a word to her, but when the conversation opened she proved to be the most entertaining talker man ever listened to. She had traveled everywhere and had seen everything, and had a laugh to make a man's heart jump. As the train thundered on the drummer made love, lied right and left, and seemed to have made a complete mash. She gave him her address, invited him to call, told him all about the family and permitted him to call her "darling" before we reached Savannah. He was to see about her baggage there, and while looking for it she slipped away. When we got to the hotel he suddenly turned white as flour. She had borrowed his diamond ring and still had it. She had slyly taken his gold watch and chain, and when he felt for his wallet his fingers clutched an empty pocket. He danced around like a crazy monkey, figuring his loss at $620, but he raved in vain. The entertaining girl who had permitted him to "darling" her, and who had solemnly informed him that she had never known what love was until then, could not be found by the police. It was a backhanded game.

Egyptian Habits.

The ordinary inhabitant of the towns passes his life in a simple and uniform manner. Before sunrise he leaves his couch, performs the morning ablutions enjoined by his religion and repeats his early prayer. To say his morning prayer after sunrise is forbidden by the ordinances of his religion, and to allow the sun to rise over one's slumbering head is regarded as prejudicial to health. He then drinks his cup of coffee and smokes his pipe either at home or in the public coffee house. His breakfast, which he takes after the coffee, or sometimes before it, consists of the remains of his meal of the previous evening, or of cakes and milk, or for a trifle he procures from the market the every-ready national dish of ful, that is, stewed beans. He then engages in his avocations, buys, sells, writes, works or moves about, all in the most comfortable, quiet and deliberate manner. "What is not done to-day must be done to-morrow," in Arabic, "to-morrow, if God please," stands written on his forehead in large letters. There is really nothing for which the Egyptian mechanics can be said to be famous. The things in which they used to excel are rapidly being forgotten. The fine masonry of the older mosques would be thrown away on the architectural tastes of the present day, and hence the race of skillful masons is becoming extinct. The colored glass which used to be made in great perfection for windows and lamps is the product of a forgotten art, and most of the glass and china used in Egypt—even the national coffee-cups—are imported from Europe. The same fate has come to the turners who used to make beautiful lattice window-screens; people now prefer glass, and lattices being no longer required, turners are forgetting how to make them. The potters do a good trade in unglazed porous vessels for cooling water, and the palm furnishes occupation to many hands. Egypt is no longer famous for fine linen; even its cotton and woolen stuffs are coarse, and its silk of poor quality. The tanners, however, have not forgotten their cunning in curing morocco leather, and the love of ornament, extending beyond slippers, supports goldsmiths in all the small towns.

SELECTED MISCELLANY.

A truly wise man should have no keeper of his secret, but himself.

One pound of learning requires ten pounds of common sense to apply it.

A noble part of every true life is to learn to undo what has been wrongly done.

Christianity is not so much the advent of a better doctrine as of a perfect character.

The people may be made to follow a line of action, but they may not be made to understand it.

Equality is the life of conversation; and he is as much out who assumes to himself any part above an other, as he who considers himself below the rest of society.

Know, dearest brother, says St. Francis of Assisi, that courtesy is one of God's own properties. Who sendeth his rain upon the just and upon the unjust, out of his great courtesy. And verily courtesy is the sister of charity, who banishes all hatred and cherishes love.

No man can anticipate or postpone his pre-determined end. Death will overtake us even in lofty towers. From the beginning God hath settled the place in which each man shall die. No man can by flight escape his fate. The destinies ride their horses by night. Whether asleep in bed, or in storm of battle, the Angel of Death will find thee. The outline is given us; we color the picture of life as well as we will. If we would overcome the laws of nature, we must not resist; we must balance them against each other.

JOCOSITIES.

One sweetly solemn thought,
Comes to us o'er and o'er.
In heaven above, where all is love,
The sleepers never snore.

When Eve brought woe to all mankind,
Old Adam called her wo-man;
But when she wooed with love so kind,
He then pronounced her woo man.
But now, with folly and with pride
Their husbands' pockets trimming,
The women are so full of whims
That men pronounce them wim-min.

THE ÆSTHETICAL COUPLE.

I shall wed a fair esthetic,
Quite regardless of expense;
All I ask is that she's utter,
And in all things quite intense.
Limp, of course, and lank she must be,
Clad in minor tones of green,
Consummate, soulful and earnest
Must she be, my precious queen.

We shall feast on lilies daily,
Quaffing draughts of beauty fair,
With a dash of ferns on Sunday
Or a peacock's feather rare.
Thus shall flow our lives forever,
Like two gently gurgling rills,
Breathing posey and two-too,
And her dad shall foot the bills.

A Chicago man threw rocks for two hours at what he supposed was a striped snake swimming in a millpond, but it proved to be a stocking belonging to one of the belles of the city, and he wishes he had given the man who caught him that $5 dollars he demanded as the price of keeping silent about the matter.

Conversation overheard in the horse car the other day: "Edith—"Are my shoes crocheted?" Mother—"Certainly not, my dear." Edith—"They are black, ain't they?" Mother—"Yes, that is undoubtedly true. Edith (triumphtly)—"Well, then, isn't that crow shade?" Silence on the part of the stern relative.

Oscar Wilde likes Mrs. Langtry chiefly because she is a Jersey Lily. "What a grand air she has," he said at the Lotos Club. "We saw her walk down a room, with a thousand people staring at her, as if she did not know they were there. I call that elegance!" Is that what you call it?" said Holland, the actor. "Well, we call that gall!"

"Really, my dear," said a friend of ours to his better half, "you have sadly disappointed me. I once considered you a jewel of a woman; but you've turned out only a bit of matrimonial paste." "Then, my love," was the reply, "console yourself with the idea that paste is very adhesive, and in this case will stick to you as long as you live.

The objection found by ladies to the telephone that they could talk only one at a time, has been remedied by a new, duplex reciprocal sort of invention, and now, two ladies, one at either end of the wire, can both talk at each other at the same time as comfortably as they could if both were together in front of a dry goods counter.

At a juvenile party a young gentleman about seven years old kept aloof from the rest of the company. The lady of the house called to him, saying, "Come and play and dance, dear. Choose one of those pretty girls for your wife." "Not likely!" cried the young cynic. "No wife for me! Do you think I want to be worried out of my life like poor papa?"

A bear broke into the house of a Nevada man the other night. He was away and his wife thought it was he coming home drunk. She didn't stop to light a lamp, but began operations. When the bear finally got away he didn't stop running till he had traveled eight miles in the heart of the mountains, and he was such a sight that the other bears wouldn't associate with him.

A liberal minded woman: Mme G. called at a friend's house on a wet day and, her feet being damp, she said to her friend: "My dear, will you let your maid bring me a pair of your slippers?" "My love," replied her friend—there were several people in the room—"do you think my slippers will fit you?" "Oh, I think so, my darling, if you will tell her to put a cork sole inside of them."

"Mamma," said a little three year-old Boston girl, while examining the phenolgical bumps of her doll's head, "if the comet should become disintegrated, as some of scientists prognosticate, might not a portion of the fragments strike the earth in the form of aerolites?" "Possibly," said the mother, arranging a bang. "And similary, dear mammy, if this great meteorological sphinx should come into too close juxta position with the earth, how serious would be the result in consequences to our own planetary system? and would such an even be in accordance with the Copernican or Ptolemac theories?" And the mother who was a native of New York City, replied: "There, there, dear, you mustn't ask so many questions; little children should be seen not heard.

Urbana's Miser.

Urbana (O) Special.

The public sale of the effects of the late John Eichholts' at his farm, drew about 2,000 people, the largest attendance ever at a sale in this country. People came from all parts of the country to see the curiosities. The deceased had never had his house painted, and every thing was in a state of decay. Ten thousand bushels of barley are still on the farm, and hundreds of bushels of corn, decayed from age, some of it 21 years old. Eighteen car-loads of grain from 10 to 20 years old has been shipped, and about 20 car-loads yet remain. One horse was sold for 10 cents. A number of old horses were sold which had never seen a harness or halter. One horse was sold that had been confined uninterruptedly in his stall for eight years and had become blind from confinement in the dark pen. Remnants of almost every kind of agricultural implements ever made were on the farm. One of the Vehicles of antediluvian days was a wagon having solid wheels cut from a log. Eichholts's father died a miser, and left him with a dollar in three silver pieces, made the year John was born. These were insederable pocket-pieces until death. He died leaving an estate of over $100 000.

He is good that does good to others. If he suffers for the good he does, he is better still; and if he suffers for them to whom he did good, he has arrived to that height of goodness that nothing but an increase of his suffering can add to it; if it proves his his death, his virtue is at its summit—it is heroism complete.

The Grand Jury of the Martin Circuit Court, in making their annual report, brought in, among others, an indictment against Valentine Strange, trustee of Brown township, for corruption in office, the charge being selling the schools over which he has control to the highest bidder. The charge created no small amount of excitement in political circles.

USE
KING'S MAGIC TOOTH ACHE CURE.

If you feel drowsy, debilitated, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver, or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR or MEDICINE.

The cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World.

AN EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC for all diseases of the Liver Stomach and Spleen.

Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

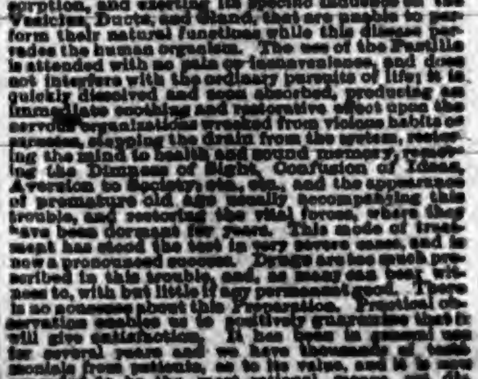
PROVED A SUCCESS



BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Glands, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons!

Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness, for 8 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, '79.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 29, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 26.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

STRONG FACTS!

A great many people are asking what particular troubles BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is good for.

It will cure Heart Disease, Paralysis, Dropsy, Kidney Disease, Consumption, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all similar diseases.

Its wonderful curative power is simply because it purifies and enriches the blood, thus beginning at the foundation, and by building up the system, drives out all disease.

A Lady Cured of Rheumatism.

Baltimore, Md., May 7, 1880.
My health was much shattered by Rheumatism when I commenced taking Brown's Iron Bitters, and I scarcely had strength enough to attend to my daily household duties. I am now using the third bottle and I am regaining strength daily, and I cheerfully recommend it to all.
I cannot say too much in praise of it. Mrs. MARY E. BRASHEAR, 173 Preatman st.

Kidney Disease Cured.

Christiansburg, Va., 1881.
• Suffering from kidney disease, from which I could get no relief, I tried Brown's Iron Bitters, which cured me completely. A child of mine, recovering from scarlet fever, had no appetite and did not seem to be able to eat at all. I gave him Iron Bitters with the happiest results.
J. KYLE MONTAGUE.

Heart Disease.

Vine St., Harrisburg, Pa.
Dec. 2, 1881.
After trying different physicians and many remedies for palpitation of the heart without receiving any benefit, I was advised to try Brown's Iron Bitters. I have used two bottles and never found anything that gave me so much relief.
Mrs. JENNIE HESS.

For the peculiar troubles to which ladies are subject, BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is invaluable. Try it.

Be sure and get the Genuine.

Ayer's Ague Cure

is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted a speedy and certain cure for Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. In miasmatic districts, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, lassitude, loss of appetite, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and extremities, are only premonitions of severer symptoms which terminate in the ague paroxysm, succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic, and other poisonous minerals form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics," in the market. The preparations made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the malarial and their own drug poison in the system, producing quinism, dizziness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. AYER'S AGUE CURE thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, mineral, or any thing that could injure the most delicate patient; and its crowning excellence, above its certainty to cure, is that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, AYER'S AGUE CURE, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy condition.

We warrant it when taken according to directions.

An Autumn Memory.

The November sun was stealing between the daintily embroidered leaflets, and playing on the ripples of the woodland rivulet. The golden-rod along the brookside was now and then disturbed by the flight of some wild bird, and the sumacs in their cardinal fezzes looked like so many nodding Turkish sentinels.

A glorious but brief period when a delicate veil of haze hangs around the wood, and the indelicate politician hangs around the candidate to negotiate the sale of his vote; when the partridge drums up in the tree, and the suspender peddler drums up in the northern part of New York; when the honest farmer works the harvest field, and the young lady works the Christmas slippers for the clergyman; when poetic damsels pluck the languid ferns, and the unpoetic housewife plucks the languishing Thanksgiving turkey!

The birds twittered by the brook, and the squirrels darted along the stone wall and up in the tree, and the voices of merry nutting parties reverberated through the silent aisles of the forest in harmony with the sincere but unpoetic squawk of the cat-bird.

That's about the style of the day it was when a light-hearted couple, tired of their woodland promenade, sat upon a fallen tree.

"I am always so happy in the woods," she commenced, "especially in the autumn, as the crepuscular shadows steal timidly into the valley, for then I float back to childhood's happy time—"

"Glad to hear it," he replied rather abrbptly. "I shall bring you here o ten; the air is exhilarating, and will do you good; and we will gather wild flowers and leaves, and arrange them in quaint designs."

"Oh, you are so good!" she said in tones of deep, unswerving devotion. "I would much rather walk here with you than in the bustling city."

"You would?" he inquired, with a slight tremor in his voice.

"Indeed I would," she responded. "When here with you, all alone, I feel perfectly secure and happy."

"And so do I," he chanted, as he thrust his hand into his vest pocket and felt his capital, which consisted of two suspender buttons and a night key—"so do I, my dear, because this pretty wood is just about fourteen miles from the nearest ice-cream saloon."—[R. K. Munkittrick, in Editor's Drawer, Harper's Magazin for December.

NEW YORK, November 18.—William L. Scott's imported French stallion, Rayon Dor, was to-day shipped by fast express to Erie, Pa. $50,000 cash was refused for him yesterday. Wilke's Spirit of the Times in to day's issue, speaks of the stallion in the most flattering terms. His earnings in 1879 were $90,985. He cost $38,000 landed in New York, the highest price ever paid for a horse on either continent.

Hunting In India.

A Bull-Chase Where It Was the Bull That Had All the Fun.

Lieut. Neville Chamberlain sends to the Field the following description of an encounter he had with a bison in the woods of the Maharajah of Mysore:

"I had no companion, so I took with me one of the local shikaris named Kampa, and another man to carry my spare rifle. My battery consisted of a double-barreled eight-bore rifle and a double-barreled twelve-bore rifle. I took the eight-bore myself, and giving Kampa my twelve-bore, crawled up to the herd through the grass. Out of some high grass just in front of me rose a splendid old bull. He was only about twenty yards off, and was just moving behind a clump of bamboos, when I fired at the point of his shoulder with the eight-bore. A great stampede took place. The smoke hung in the long grass—which as I knelt was nearly up to my neck—and I could not see to give him the second barrel. I ran forward, but could see nothing; so, still running, I opened the breech of the rifle, threw out the empty cartridge, and was in the act of pushing a fresh cartridge home, when from behind a small, thick clump of bamboos, some five yards from me, and about thirty yards from where I had started, I heard a loud snort. Kampa gasped out: "Kartil" (bison) and vanished; and at once the bull came charging down on me. I only had time, as he hurried himself at me, to spring behind a small tree on my left. He whizzed past like a battering-ram, cutting a large slab of bark out with his horns, and, turning almost in his own length, was around at me again. This occurred four or five times, but my attention was so fully taken up in dodging him that I could not get the rifle ready for use. To make a long story short, it ended by my catching my feet in a creeper. I fell over backward, and as I rose he ran in and tossed me. One horn, I suppose his left one, fortunately went clear through my breeches and flannel shirt, tearing them to ribbons, and, so far as I can remember, I seemed to sit on his head, while his other horn passed under my right arm. He threw me a long way, and I fell on my back under some bamboos, the rifle dropping out of my hand from the shock of being tossed. I was a great deal shaken, and out of breath, but I think my first thought was that now he would leave me if I kept still; but he ran up again and stood over my body, shaking his huge head over my chest. I thought then that it was hopeless. I could think of nothing better to do to protect myself, so sat up and struck him four or five times with my fist on one eye, which I could just reach when his head was down. He shook his head and pushed me back with his nose. I managed then to plant several severe kicks on his muzzle with my heavy hobnailed boots, and he commenced sparring at my legs with his horns. I did my best to keep them out of the way, but got a few bruises on the shins. This began to be monotonous, and I knew another toss would not find a friendly pair of pants. He was still standing over me when I got in a good volley of hobnails on his nose, shouted at him, and sat up to hit him again; then, to my intense relief, he gave a bellow, and went crashing off down hill. I never saw the bull again."

Some idea of the great slaughter of deer which annually takes place in California, Nevada and Oregon, may be gained from the trade statistics of the hide dealers. One export house in San Francisco has a pile containing 8,000 deerskins in its warehouse. It annually handles over 75,000 skins, and estimates the annual number of deer killed at 200,000. The largest portion of the skins come from Northwest Nevada and Southeastern Oregon. In Oregon and California large numbers of the animals are left to rot, the skins being all that is desired.

A steam tricycle, enabling the rider to travel at from fifteen to twenty miles an hour, with very little labor, has been invented by a Frenchman.

The Bad American Tooth.

The march of progress seems to tell terribly on the teeth, for what other cause there can be for the pre-eminently disastrous condition of the molars of young America it is difficult to imagine. There are at present twelve large factories for the production of artificial teeth in the United States, turning out 10,000,000 teeth a year, while the consumption of gold used in stopping cavities in the natural teeth of America amounts in value to $500,000, and is one of the chief facts that is alarming M. Cernuschi and the bimetalists, as it bears a very large proportion to the annual production of that metal. The present dearth of ivory may perhaps be traced partly to the American demand for molars and grinders, and the ships of Jonathan seem to be as busy in exporting gold and ivory from Europe as those of King Solomon were from Tarshish, though history, which only narrates the toothaches of princes, is silent as to whether this evil was prevalent among his subjects about that time. It is an ill wind, however, that blows nobody good, and the American dentist, like the German occulist, flourishes on the physical failures of his countrymen. —Pall Mall Gazette.

Geological examination of the delta of the Mississippi now shows that for a distance of about 300 miles there are buried forests of large trees, one over the other, with interspaces of sand. Ten distinct forest growths of this description have succeeded each other. Of these trees, known as the bald cypress, some have been found over twenty-five feet in diameter and one contained 5,600 rings; in some instances, too, huge trees have grown over the stumps of others equally large. From these facts geologists have assumed the antiquity of each forest growth at 10,000 years, or 100,000 for all.

Mr. Howells has changed the title of his forthcoming novel—it is to be "A Woman's Reason," instead of "A Sea Change"—again a Shakespearean title, as the readers of the "Two Gentlemen of Verona" will remember.

SANTA CLAUSE OUTDONE.

The Place Where Parents Should Select Holiday Goods.

Beats Everything We Ever Saw.

Those of our readers who contemplate buying cheap or costly presents for their family and friends during the holidays should first call at Joseph Abright's jewelry store. He has an elegant selection of jewelry, silverware, ladies' and gentlemen's gold and silver watches, rings, bracelets, breast-pins knives, forks, spoons and in fact all kind of goods appropriate for Christmas or New Years presents. Those of a musical turn of mind can also be suited. Instruments of all kinds and grades are ready for sale and much cheaper than they can be purchased anywhere in the county. Mr. Abright has been in the business so long that he thoroughly understands making selections, and his goods can be relied on as being first-class in every particular. He always marks everything down to bottom prices for the holiday trade, and, of course, it will be to the advantage of all to call and make inquiries whether they buy or not. Be sure and go to Abright's first and you will never regret it.

Obituary.

Nancy Larimore was born in Richland county, Ohio, February 26, 1827; was married to Dr. James H. Larimore February 24, 1848, in Bucyrus, Crawford county, Ohio; removed to this state in 1857; settled in Zanesville Allen county, Ind; next removed to Auburn, in the early part of 1862, where she lived a number of years; again changed residence to several parts of the county, settling at St. John, where she died on the morning of December 4, 1882, at 7:30 p. m. The remains were interred in Cedar Creek cemetery, Rev. Rodher, of Churubusco, officiating.

CARD OF THANKS.

ED. COURIER: Allow me, through the columns of your paper, in behalf of myself and sisters, to return our most heartfelt thanks to the kind friends and neighbors who rendered us such kindness during the long illness and death of our mother. Respectfully,

GEO. LARIMORE.

If the following plan, adopted by a Detroit saloon-keeper, should be adopted by the saloon-keepers generally all over the country, the effect could not but be beneficial. The one referred to advertise that he has paid $300 for a year's license to sell liquors, but that he means to voluntarily restrict his business within certain moral bonds. In an advertisement he says: "To the wife who has a drunkard for a husband, or a friend who is dissipated, I say emphatically, give me notice of such cases, and all such shall be excluded from my place. Let fathers, mothers, sisters, do likewise, and their requests shall be regarded. I pay a heavy tax for the privilege of selling whisky and other liquors, and I want it distinctly understood that I have no desire to sell to drunkards or minors, or to the poor or destitute. I much prefer that they save their money and put it where it will do the most good to their families."

Bill Allen, the colored murderer of a Chicago policeman, has been hunted to his death. He was found hiding in a hen-coop and literally riddled with bullets. The citizens were terribly enraged and would not believe the coon was dead. A novel method was adopted to satisfy them, and the body, while yet warm, was washed and everything taken off it but the trousers. The hands were then crossed on the breast and tied, and the body was placed on a cot and hoisted up to one of the side basement windows of the station. The mob was then allowed to form in pairs and march past, taking one glance and then moving on to make room for those behind. The eyes of the dead desperado were partially open and the mouth and face were stained with blood. Five bullet holes were visible, two under the right arm, which alone were fatal, one in the left breast, and a ball in each leg.

The Wabash Courier tells of a new swindle now being practiced among the farmers: "A slick fellow comes along, driving a shiny rig, and sells carpet by the sample. He offers three-ply ingrain at 37½ cents per yard. The farmer selects the pattern he wants; the agent writes out the number of yards and the price; the farmer signs the order (?) and the next week he has his note in the bank to pay, but never sees or hears of the carpet man again."

How to Do It.

A CAPITAL REFERENCE OF PRESENT AND FUTURE INTEREST, AND THE LITTLE TROUBLE TO SECURE IT.

A handy thing indeed to have in the house will be the special edition of the B. & O. Red Book, now in course of preparation. The surprising results of this year's elections all over the country make it a most interesting study when presented in shape for ready comparison. Of more or less interest just now in contrasting the past and the present, the future as calculated from "the might have been" will prove an all-absorbing occupation to very many people.

In the new Red Book, which will bear the cleverly adapted title of "How 'Twas Done," all the figures are from official sources, being received under the seal of the secretaries of the different states, and therefore correct beyond question. The comparisons and calculations generally are made by experienced statisticians, and may be depended upon as accurate. The scope of the little volume is something more than ever before attempted in a political text-book, going much farther into details and summing up facts more concisely than the ordinary run of such publications. About everything that one wishes to know is presented clearly and intelligently. The comparisons of the vote of this year with the vote at the preceding election are full and complete, showing not only majorities but losses and gains of republican, democratic, prohibition and greenback vote. Where states have been redistricted congressionally, the comparisons are made in districts as now constituted, and in the remarks all the changes in districts are shown, as well as very much interesting data relative to candidates, etc.

The book will be an invaluable reference for use at coming elections, and those who take any interest whatever in politics should adopt means to secure a copy now, as possibly when they want it most the edition will be exhausted. The mere trouble of inditing a request to C. K. Lord, Baltimore, Md., will insure the receipt of a copy of the book, as no charge whatever is made for it. Already a very large number of requests have been received, and envelopes are being addressed as requests come in, so that the books may be forwarded immediately upon receipt from the printer. No publication of similar character can be procured for money.

Like all the B. & O publications, it will be a gem from a typographical standpoint. As an indication of the value of the work, quite a number of prominent newspaper publishers have requested sufficient number of copies to send to their entire list of subscribers at their own expense. Any subscriber or patron of this paper will have a copy of the book sent him by forwarding his address, as hitherto stated, to C. K. Lord, at Baltimore.

The Ohio people have a road law still different from ours. The following item from the Hicksville News will give our readers some idea of how such things run in the Buckeye state: "The road law, designated to prevent the cutting of roads, which can be done only in the rainy season, is now in force. From the 15th of November to the 15th of May of each year it is unlawful to carry a burden of more than two thousand and five hundred pounds in a vehicle having a tire of less than four inches in width, unless the roads be dry or frozen sufficiently to bear burdens of greater weight. The county commissioners are empowered to prescribe weights that may be carried in vehicles having a tire of greater width. The commissioners also constitute a board of directors, with the power to prosecute all offenders, and shall fix the penalty at no less than $15. So says an exchange."

There is a deep significance in silence. Were a man forced for a length of time but to hold his peace, it were in most cases an incalculable benefit to his insight. Thought works in silence, so does virtue. What folly would one avoid did the tongue be quiet till the mind had finished and was calling for utterance.

How a Story Grew.

Andrew Tappan, of Jericho, Long Island was asked if it was true that he had not slept a wink for six months. "I saw an item to that effect," he replied, "a good many times last week and the week before. My father, George Tappan, is the postmaster at Jericho, and one of the county papers printed an item some weeks ago saying that he had been in poor health for six months, and that he was not able to sleep much. The next we knew someone sent us a lot of papers containing the news that he hadn't slept any for six months, and that the case was attracting the attention of physicians. Then the papers got it that I was the man. It wasn't long after we got the first papers until someone wrote us that the way to go to sleep was to eat plenty of turnips for breakfast and supper three or four days in succession. Another man wrote that cloves were good to make a man sleep if eaten in quantities at intervals of an hour or two, while another wrote that if I would lie on my back and roll my eyes from one side to the other long enough I'd go to sleep without fail. They were all good remedies, I have no doubt, but neither my father nor I have tried them."—New York Sun.

She Swar'd.

"Do you know the nature of an oath?" asked a judge of a colored woman.

"Yes, sah; I reckon I does."

"You know, then, what it is to swear?"

"Yes, sah; I reckon I does."

"Hold up your hand and swear." She held up her hand and ripped out an oath which almost took the judge's breath.

"I'll send you to jail for this, you miserable creature."

"For what, jedge?"

"For using profane language in this courtroom."

"I doesn't know what ye means by 'fane language. Yer tole me ter swar, an' I swar'd. White folks gittin' so high up it gins a nigger a crick in de naik ter look up at 'em. I'se gwine ter leave dis town, cause I wa'n't borned in Arkansaw, nohow."—Arkansas Traveler.

The will of the late Mary M. Perkins of Boston reads: "I leave to my husband," etc., meaning Ezra G. Perkins, though she did not describe him by name. John Hardy, from whom she supposed herself divorced before marrying Perkins, now claims the property, on the ground that he was her lawful husband, the divorce proceedings having been fraudulent. The Probate Court decided that the estate should be divided between the two men, and the case is before the Supreme Court on appeal.

How It Was Done.

"How do you manage," said a lady to her friend, "to appear so happy and good natured all the time?" "I always have Parker's Ginger Tonic handy," was the replay, "and this easily keep myself and family in good health. When I am well I always feel good natured." 49-4t.

WHEN SUMMER GOES.

When summer goes—then shadows creep
Across the world of trees and flowers;
The birds a solemn silence keep
Through autumn's slowly darkening hours,
And swiftly fades each lingering rose
When summer goes.

When summer goes—then disappears
Life's joyous youth; a goodly store
Of spring-tide hopes, and dreams and fears,
And joys that will return no more.
Life's sun a deeper shadow throws
When summer goes.

When summer goes—still strength remains
To bear whatever time may bring;
For [illegible] courage [illegible];
Though [illegible] have [illegible] heart to sing;
And day by day faith stronger grows,
When summer goes.

THE WHITE CHEST.

It was just the house I wanted. In size and situation it suited me exactly, as the phrase goes literally down to the ground. Its rent, too, was extremely moderate. Why, then, did I hesitate to take it? Why did everybody hesitate to take it? For the last seven years or more it had never been let. All the house agents at the west end had had it in hand, one after another. The terms had been reduced each season that it came into the market, and still there was no finding a tenant for it. Everybody who went over the house was charmed with it. Nevertheless, everybody having reached the roof and having looked around for a minute or two, descended with a firm determination not to take the house on any consideration.

Now, what was the reason? It was not haunted; no ghosts had ever been seen, or mysterious noises heard—such things were never even hinted. I had heard the rumors about the house often, and my curiosity had always been piqued; so that now, when I wanted just such a house for the season, I determined to go and look at it for myself.

Finding all satisfactory and just as I expected from top to bottom I stepped out on to the roof with Mr. Crumble, agent, saying:

"Well, I am sure I can't conceive why people will not live here!"

"Just then my eye fell upon a curious object erected upon the leads at the rear and surrounded by a high railing. It looked like a huge skylight or glass lantern, about ten feet long, three feet high, and three broad. But instead of forming a light for a staircase or room beneath it seemed to have been built for the purpose of covering another curious object, which, occupying nearly the whole of the space under the glass, was plainly visible through it. This was a plain white box resembling a seaman's chest more than anything, only much larger. It rested upon four legs or feet, which raised it nearly a foot from the flat surface of the roof. It was a creamy white and varnished, and, apparently not being intended to open any more than its glass covering, had no hinges or lock to its top or lid.

"What the deuce is that?" said I to the worthy agent.

"Ah!" replied the functionary, with an odd expression in his face, "that's it, sir."

"What is it, pray?"

"Why, the secret, sir."

"The secret? How is it a secret? What do you mean?"

"Well, sir, what is it—what's it meant for—what's inside of it?"

"Don't you know?"

"No, sir."

"Doesn't any one know?"

"I suppose somebody does, but we don't; we are forbidden to inquire or attempt to find out. If we knew, we should have been able to let the house long ago."

"How long has it been there?"

"A long while, I believe, sir—ten or fifteen years. Before my time."

"But who put it up?"

"Well, Mr. Gayling, we suppose; nobody seems to know exactly when it appeared there."

"But the servants," I protested, "they surely must know."

"Oh! I have heard there were none in the house at the time; they were all dismissed just before it was put up. Mr. Gayling never keeps many servants; sometimes he has only one, sometimes none. Nobody lives in the house when he's away; but he always leaves the keys with us. He is always changing his servants, Mr. Gayling is. I have often heard him say that he likes new brooms."

"What is he, or what was he?"

"A gentleman in the naval line, I believe, sir. They are rather rum, 'uns I'm told."

"Humph!" I said, "very odd. But do you mean to tell me that nobody will live here because they don't know what's in that box?"

"That is partly the reason, sir."

"Absurd!" I was going on, when Mr. Crumble continued:

"But there is a clause in the agreement about it; that's what does it, sir."

"Explain," said I.

"Well, sir, here is the clause," and he then produced the document. "Perhaps you would like to read it yourself."

Thus it ran:

"And in taking the house, at the rental, and for the term specified as above, I hereby solemnly pledge my oath never, directly or indirectly, through my own agency or that of others, to attempt to meddle with, or disturb the white chest under the glass case of the roof, or to seek in any way to discover for what purpose it has been placed there, or to know what it contains; and I further guarantee that no person in my employ, nor any one entering the house during my tenancy thereof, shall make any such attempt; and I hereby undertake that in the event of their being detected in doing so, or of my doing so, to forfeit the sum of $5,000, and in accordance with this agreement have, in proper legal form, lodged the said sum with the bankers of Thomas Gayling, Esq., the lessor, as a guarantee of my good faith."

"But for that clause," went on the agent as I finished reading it, with some surprise, "we should have no difficulty in letting the house."

This strange prohibition excited my curiosity, and set me thinking; and the result of my thinking was, that I signed the agreement two days afterward, having consented to the peculiar stipulation regarding the deposit. I had no fear of losing my $5,000; the interest on it was a mere addition to the rent, and the house was so exactly what I wanted that it would even then be cheap to me, with my large family of motherless children.

I had, on taking the house, determined on not bothering myself about the chest; but before I had been there a month it began to act as a nightmare on me, an incubus I could not shake off. These feelings at last reached such a pitch that I at length changed my bedroom. I would not sleep any longer directly underneath this accursed mystery.

About a week after this a lengthy debate kept me late at the house of commons, and, walking home for the sake of fresh air, I found the midsummer dawn breaking as I struck into Park Lane, and at that moment I was startled by observing in the western sky a strong light, not due to reflected sunrise, and ere I had walked another 200 yards I saw—yes, merciful powers! it was my house that was on fire!

I can scarcely record what followed; I only know that some how I found myself in the midst of the police and firemen; that I explained to the chief who I was, and that under his escort I soon ascertained that all the inmates of my house—my children, their governess, and the servants—were in safety, and had been taken into a neighbor's at the rear; that as soon as I found this to be the case, I, accompanied still by the superintendent, mounted to the top of an adjacent residence, whence the firemen were directing the hose upon the flames.

Once on this vantage point my mind reverted to the white chest. Was it still there? Yes; the flames, though bursting out from all the windows of the upper stories, back and front, had not yet done more than wrench and crack portions of the glass case. But presently, amidst the roar of the flames, there came a dull, heavy rumble for a moment, and then with a tremendous crash, the roof fell in. With it went the glass-case and the now charred and blackened chest itself.

But, good heavens! what was it that I looked down upon? I turned my face away for a moment with a shudder, for there, protruding through the splintered fragments of its once creamy-white wooden case, was a huge leaden coffin, which, in its turn, melting and bursting with the heat, displayed within the unmistakable form of a shrouded corpse! I was in the act of drawing my companion's attention to it in horror, when suddenly there flew up around it with redoubled fury, such a mass of flame and smoke, that it was entirely hidden, and soon the fire had so spread and burst out again that the horrible spectacle of this unintentional cremation was shut from sight, and the house was finally burned to the ground.

I pass over what immediately followed after I had made my way back to the friendly abode where the members of my family were sheltered. In a few days they were snugly settled again in another home, fortunately not very much the worse for the terrible scare.

In due course the time arrived for looking into my losses, and while I was doing so I received a letter from Mr. Gayling, who had come to town, requesting an interview. I was glad of this, for I foresaw it must lead to some explanation of the strange circumstances surrounding the agreement I had signed. Unexpectedly, Mr. Gayling disclosed it to me immediately after we met.

"I have asked for this interview, sir," he said abruptly, "because I am a ruined man through your tenancy of my house."

"But," I interposed, "I am told you were fully insured. I do not understand you."

"Listen, sir," he went on, "and you will: I was brought up to the sea, and followed it till mid-life, for I was entirely dependent on my own earnings. My only relative at this time was an old uncle, also a sailor, and a most eccentric man, as you will presently see. Fifteen years ago he suddenly came into possession of a large sum of money; I never knew how, but he retired and took that house. He had only been in it three years when a mortal sickness overtook him; he sent for me.

"'Tom,' said he, 'I am dying, and I don't like it; I am terrified, not so much at the thought of death, as at the thought of burial; a sailor's grave I would not mind, but to be boxed up and thrust into the earth—no, Tom, I won't stand it! I look to you to see that it doesn't happen; I've made my will, Tom; I've left you all I possess, but on one condition, and it is, that you are my heir so long as I am well above ground, and no longer—mark the words, well above ground! Directly I am buried, or my remains are allowed to mingle with mother earth, as she is called, all my money, mind, goes straight to the Seaman's hospital, every penny of it.'

"'But pray what am I to do with you?' I inquired.

"'Oh, run me up aloft, masthead me, anything you like, but don't bury me.'

"Well," went on Mr. Gayling, "to make a long story short, I found that the conditions of the old man's will were binding, and his executors and myself hit upon the plan of hoisting the coffin on to the roof of the house. Under certain conditions we found it was possible for us legally to do this. So I dismissed my three servants, employed a country undertaker, my old ship's carpenter, and a foreign glazier, in order that the matter should not be talked of in the neighborhood, and personally saw the arrangements carried out. You can now understand my reasons for not having it meddled with; yes, sir, and you can now understand that the conditions of the will must take effect. No signs of the coffin or the body even was to be discovered in the ruins of that house. I have had a rigid search made, to no purpose; the old gentleman's remains have been consumed, have mingled with mother earth, and the money passes, as a matter of course, to the seaman's hospital. I have not a penny in the world. What can you do for me?"

It is not necessary for me to say what I did for Mr. Gayling, but, finding by other evidence that his story was substantially correct, I felt his case was a hard one, certainly a strange one, and I acted, I hope, not ungenerously toward him.

A "MASHED" GOVERNOR.

The Lieutenant Governor of Colorado "Gone" on the Lily.

Denver Tribune.

"Morse," said Col. W. H. Bush to his beautiful complexioned lieutenant at the Opera House, last night, "Morse, have we any dates open during the month of January?"

"No, sir," replied Mr. Morse, "not one."

"I am very sorry," said Colonel Bush; "to-day I received a letter from Governor Tabor, and he is anxious to make dates for Mrs. Langtry. Shall I read you what he says?"

"I am always pleased to hear the words of wisdom that fall from the Governor's lips," said Mr. Morse.

Colonel Bush produced a letter from his pocket, and read:

"NEW YORK, Nov. 15.

"My Dear William—I cannot retire for the night before telling you what a charming time I have had to-day. I went to the matinee, to-day, and heard Mrs. Langtry in Shakespeare's play of 'She Stoops to Conquer,' and I must say I was never so delighted in all my life. She is a lovely woman. She has the finest eyes I ever saw, and her ankle is certainly exquisitely turned. At the end of the third act a note was handed me. 'Please come behind the scenes. I want to see you. Lily.' Well, you can make money on buying pools that I got behind the scenes as soon as I could get there. I paid the prompter $20 to show me to her dressing room. 'Oh, my dear Mr. Tabor,' she said in the sweetest voice I ever heard; 'I am overjoyed to see you. I knew it was you by your beautiful mustache!' My heart was in my mouth in a minute, but I had presence of mind enough to swallow it. 'Do sit down,' says she, giving a hand, so soft and small and white that I couldn't help squeezing it. Oh, William, she has a divine little hand."

Col. Bush paused a moment to smack his lips, in which he was modestly but cordially joined by Mr. Morse. Then he continued to read:

"'I do so hope,' said she, 'that I shall be able to visit Denver. I hear you have a lovely opera-house. And, by the way, you are about to be elected Senator, aren't you?'"

I told her I was, and she congratulated me. "She has the plumpest figure I have ever gazed upon for many a day, and her neck and shoulders are simply indescribable."

"Please read that last sentence again," said Mr. Morse, "I didn't quite catch its drift."

Col. Bush complied, and then continued:

"Well, we sat and talked for fully fifteen minutes, and I managed to discover that she was altogether the most fascinating woman I ever came across. She has very symmetrical arms, William, and a beautiful taper waist. All in all, I consider her a daisy. I told her I reckoned we could give her dates somewhere in January. For heaven's sake, William, do the best you can, for she is a perfect Venus Belvidere. And, by the way, before we parted, she told me she wanted to bring Abbey with her. Abbey is her maid, I suppose. 'You will be charmed with Abbey,' says she. 'If Abbey is as well put up as you, marm,' says I, 'I will be delighted.' 'Oh, go 'way,' says she, 'you Americans are so naughty!' Now, William, let us by all means have Lily and Abbey."

"Are you quite sure, Morse," said Col. Bush, "that all our dates are filled for January."

"Quite sure," replied Mr. Morse.

"Because," said Col. Bush, "I thought that perhaps, while the Governor was entertaining Lily, you might hustle around and make it interesting for Abbey—eh, my boy?"

"But," said Mr. Morse, "it suddenly occurs to me that this Abbey is not a young woman, but a miserable, remorseless man. Come to think of it, Mrs. Langtry's manager is named Abbey—Henry M. Abbey."

"That's so, by jinks!" exclaimed Col. Bush. "What an arrant sucker that man Tabor is, to be sure. No, of course we haven't any open dates, and you may telegraph the old man so at once! Abbey, indeed! Good heavens, Morse, what a narrow escape we've had!"

Human Failings.

Interesting Facts About Hair.

Dr Wilder in the Medical Tribune.

Whether the hair should be cut I never could quite satisfy myself. As a physiological practice, I seriously doubt the propriety. Every cutting is a wounding, and there is some sort of bleeding in consequence, and waste of vital force. I think it will be found that long-lived persons most frequently wear the hair long.

The cutting of the hair stimulates to a new growth to supply the waste. Thus the energy required to maintain the vigor of the body is draw off to make good the wanton destructon. It is said, I know, that after the hair has grown to a certain length it loses its vitality at the extremity, and splits or "brooms up." Whether this would be the case if the hair should never be cut I would like to know. When it is cut a fluid exudes, and forms a scab or cicatrix at each wounded extremity, indicating that there has been injury.

Women and priests have generally worn long hair. I never could imagine why this distinction was made. The ancient priest was very often unsexed or devoted to celibacy, but I cannot surmise whether that had any-thing to do with it. Kings wore their hair long in imitation of Samson, and the golden Sun-God Mithias. I suspect from this that the first men shorn were slaves and laborers; the freemen wore their hair unmutilated, and as the crown of perfect manhood and manliness. If this be correct, the new era of freedom, when it shall ever dawn, will be characterized by men unshorn as well as women unperverted.

I wish that our science and our civilization had better devices for preserving the integrity of the hair. Baldness is a deformity, and premature whiteness a defect. If the head was in health, and the body in proper vigor, I am confident that this would not be. I am apprehensive that our dietetic habits occasion the bleaching of the hair; the stiff, arsenic-prepared hat is responsible for much of the baldness. Our hats are unhealthy, from the tricks of the hatters. I suppose there are other causes, however. Heridity has its influence. Certain diseases wither the hair at its roots; others lower the vitality of the skin, and so depilate the body.

I acknowledge that the shingled head disgusts me. It cannot be wholesome. The most sensitive part of the head is at the back, where the neck joins. That place, exposed to unusual cold or heat, is liable to receive an injury that will be permanent, if not fatal, in a short period. The whole head wants protection, and the hair affords this as no other protection can. Men have beards because they need them, and it is wicked to cut them off. No growth or part of the body is superfluous, and we ought, as candidates for health and long life, to preserve ourselves from violence or mutilation. Integrity is the true manly standard.

Health of American Women.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

In the North American Review for December there is a symposium in which the "Health of American Women" is discussed in a most interesting and instructive manner by Dr. Dio Lewis, Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Dr. James Read Chadwick. It is a subject which every one has at heart more or less, and the wider correct intelligence in respect to it is spread the better for all of us and for the coming generations. The chief point of attack on the part of Dr. Lewis is the corset. He is perfectly satisfied of the fact that it causes great injury through the displacement of abdominal parts, and tends to render those kinds of exercise impracticable or unprofitable which conduce to health. It is his claim that naturally woman is a healthy being, and the equal, or very nearly so, in size and strength to man.

He has prosecuted his investigations far and wide, and he finds marked physical inferiority only where the corset prevails. He has inquired of numerous missionaries with respect to savages, and he has used his own eyes with respect to others. He finds, if anything, the uncorseted woman is the stronger animal of the two, the man being somewhat weakened by vices. An Indian woman is about as tough and strong as a pony, and a Dahomey Amazon considers herself the equal of two men. The women of the poorer classes in Ireland and Germany, Dr. Lewis claims, are as healthy as the men and can do as much hard work of the same kind. He cites many examples of weak women restored to health and strength by right dressing and living. The errors in woman's dress are: "1. The corset, which reduces the waist from three to fifteen inches, and pushes the organs within downward. 2. Unequal distribution. While her chest and hips are often overloaded, her arms and legs are so thinly clad that their imperfect circulation compels congestion of the trunk and head. 3. Long, heavy skirts, which drag upon the body and impede the movement of the legs. 4. Tight shoes, which arrest circulation and make walking difficult; high heels, which increase the difficulties in walking, and so change the center of gravity in the body as to produce dislocation in the pelvic viscera." He quotes from a professor in a prominent medical college, who says: "I am sure without being able to demonstrate it, that ninety per cent. of so-called female weaknesses have their origin in corsets and heavy skirts. They not only depress the pelvic organs by their pressure and weight, but weaken all of their normal efforts."

Mrs. Stanton is inclined to lay considerable stress on the proposition that the health of American women is impaired because she is denied her mental and physical rights as compared with those of men. The girl takes to her needle while the boy develops his muscle and mind in advantageous employment. Men have a diversity of callings adapted to their individual predilections; most women simply keep house, no matter what their predilections are. The world of one is larger than that of the other. She calls for equality, for co-education of the sexes, and a wider sphere for women in order to give her capacities a fair show, and also that she may have something else to think about than the coming husband, and something else to do than to dance and flirt. She must dress sensibly and lead a fuller life in every way if she would fulfill her physical as well as other possibilities.

Dr. Cadwick makes a combination of the two kinds of criticism given above, though he is not so specifically vindictive about the corsets. They are bad enough, however. He enters into the physiological field rather more minutely than Dr. Lewis, and does what he can to explode the error that the woman needs rest during certain periods of the months. When nature is not abused it takes care of its processes, and there is no more exhaustation at one time than another. If she needs it, it is only because she has injured herself. Her education is defective, according to Dr. Chadwick, very much as Mrs. Stanton points out. She permits our climate to confine her to the house more than women in other civilized countries do. Her food and drink are not what they ought to be, and he makes the somewhat remarkable statement that he thinks more injury is done to women by tea, in the United States, than to men by alcohol. But he does not take a very discouraging view of the situation, and has "seen so vast an improvement in their physical and mental vigor during the few years over which (his) personal observation extends that (he) feels encouraged to predict for them in the near future as great pre-eminence in physical and mental strength as is now universally accorded to them for physical beauty."

It is rather nice in the Doctor to say this. It sounds more pleasant than the words of Dr. Lewis to the effect that, "while we are so proud of our telegraphs and railroads and grand inventions and magnificent improvements and large corn crops, that we run our printing presses all night to proclaim our glory to the rising sun, our doctors, standing in the midst of a nation of men sucking tobacco, caution a nation of corseted women to go slow and lie flat on their backs three months in a year."

Feminine Peculiarities.

There are little peculiarities individual to the fair sex which are both curious and amusing. Why does a woman so often drop her fan or her handkerchief? that has puzzled many a masculine brain. There are two reasons for the accident, if it be so called for want of a better word. First, the fair creature's tongue runs so fast that the wigging of the organ loosens the tension of the muscles of the hand; second, the fan or handkerchief is purposely dropped that a „horrid man" may show gallantry in picking it up and ten chances to one the lady beats him in that operation after he has bent his rheumatic limbs in an effort to be gallant. She is satisfied with the display of servility. Why do women, if looked at by a man, proceed at once to chew their lips or convulsively press them together in the intervals of chewing? That proceeds sometimes from modesty which urges them to do something to divert their minds from the masculine imprudence or admiration, or it may suggest that the owner has a very kissable mouth, the lips of which bitten will become beautifully red, or it may be the result of the unpleasant feelings of a new set, or the oscillatory movement of an old set, of false teeth. You need not pay any money for the show, and yet you take your choice of reasons. Why is it that women with fine eyes roll them toward the ceilings or the sky? That is easily answered. They wish to look angelic, and they do.

A Marvel Of Surgery.

Philadelphia Record.

The students in the hospital of Oral surgery, at Tenth and Arch streets, were shown a patient at Saturday's clinic whose throat had been cut from ear to ear, and who had then been hung by the neck, but still survived his injuries. He breathes through a silver tube in the throat, and for six months was nourished entirely by enemata. The man's name is Simon Ladenski, a native of Roumania. In the winter of 1877, he then being twenty three years old, Ladenski was one of a party of ten men whose throats were cut by a band of gypsy robbers on the road from Varsloe. Ladenski was not killed, and on regaining consciousness and finding the robbers quarling over the division of the plunder he attempted to crawl into some bushes by the way side. Being detected he was strung up to a tree by the neck and when again unconscious he was left down and thrown among the bodies of his companions, but not until he had been stabbed in the abdomen and cut in the cheek. Two days later the bodies were found by Professor Russ, of Jassy, and Ladenski and a companion who was still alive were removed to town. The latter soon died, and then Professor Russ removed his patient to Vienna. There Ladenski was placed under the care of the most eminent Austrian surgeons. It was found that the windpipe was closed, and for two years the man was unable to utter a word. He breathed through an opening in the neck. After many efforts a large threaded needle was passed up through the trachea and into the mouth. Small beads was then drawn through, being daily increased in size in order to effect a permanent enlargement of the obstruction. The man is still obliged to practice this device, and wears the instrument in his windpipe during the night, being able to breath when in an upright position with out its aid. He has been examined by the leading surgeons of Berlin, Paris and London, and it is expected that some day it will be possible to close up the opening in the throat.

Stage Murder.

Indianapolis Journal.

The natural and almost inevitable result has finally followed in the barbarous, murderous, exhibition given throughout the country by Frank Frayne, the expert rifle shot. The girl holding on her head the apple which he was to shoot, a la Tell, was killed almost instantly yesterday afternoon, in Cincinnati, where this brutal performance was on the bills of the Colliseum Theater. Frayne was promptly arrested. No words are hot enough to condemn this character of exhibitions. The press has cried out against them, has demanded that the law shall interfere, and that they shall be peremptorily stopped, but thus far without effect. It required several and repeated maimings and killings before the trapeze was at all protected, and then very imperfectly; and it was a long time before the carrying of a child across the slack wire at a fatal height was prohibited. It is possible the sacrifice of poor Annie Von Behren may compel the cessation of such degrading exhibitions as this of Frayne's. The public which patronizes these shows, crowding the building from pit to gallery, and growing more excited and enthusiastic as the peril to life and limb is increased, have a responsibility only a little less than that of the murderous agent and the murderous manager. Such exhibitions are no whit different or better than the cruel spectacles with which Roman emperors fed their brutalized people. The point in Frayne's exhibition was not the accuracy of his shot—that could have been demonstrated by shooting at an inanimate target—but it was in the peril to the life of the girl who stood before his fatal weapon. The people who looked with breathless interest, and applauded to the echo the escape of the victim, are no higher than the Roman audiences whose brutality it is fashionable to inveigh against.

The spangled trainer who goes into the cage of lions is something of a brave man. He takes his life in his hand, and exposes no one but himself to danger. But the man who places a girl or a lad before him, and imperils her or his life, as did Frayne, and the theatrical manager who permitted it or engaged the "attraction" for the money there is in it, are simply and purely murderers in the eye of both morals and the law. They put a human life in jeopardy for gain, and that is the meanest sort of murder, and in this last instance the murder was consummated by a tragic death.

A Benevolent Detroiter.

Detroit Free Press.

He was passing the city hall on the Michigan avenue side at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, when he struck an icy spot.

Usual result:

The ice slipped from under him toward Woodward avenue, and he slipped ahead toward Griswold street.

It has been figured that only one man in 3,256,907 can save himself under such circumstances.

He clawed—he wobbled—he went down.

He to the right—cane to the left—legs all over—pavement unhurt.

Usual number of boys around—usual yells of delight, together with at least fifty sarcastic inquiries as to whether he intended to have his photograph taken then, or wait till some dark night.

A few few feet away a lone man stood leaning against a post. His ears began to work, his face grew red, and it was plain that he wanted to yell right out. But something restrained him. The victim arose, picked up his hat and cane, and with a benign expression on his face walked up to the man at the post and said:

"Mr. Brown, did you see me tumble?"

"Yes, sir."

"And you want to laugh?"

"N-no, sir."

"Yes you do? Don't lie about it, for I've been right there myself! You want to laugh, and yet you know that I hold a mortgage on your house and lot, and can foreclose. Now, then, I'll extend the time a full year, and you go ahead and laugh all you want to!"

"But, sir—."

"Shut up! Laugh, sir—laugh! Good-day!"

The citizen walked away with a limp, gazing straight before him, and the man at the post let go and laughed until a policeman came along and rubbed snow on the back of his neck.

That's the kind of people there are in Detroit. They don't slip up and claw around and take a drop without expecting to make the world brighter and better for some poor mortal.

A Fortune in a Bedstead.

A young St. Louis housekeeper, who had read in a Paris letter that four-post bedsteads were again in fashion, started in search of one of them the other day. She finally found what she desired in the house and under the person of a sick Hungarian, whose wife was painfully supporting him by sewing, and who valued it as an heirloom, but she was willing to supply his necessities by selling it. The next day she took a dealer to fix the price, and it having been purchased for a liberal sum, it was sent to his shop to be fitted with new ropes. It was, in fact, a mahogany four-poster of admirable workmanship, and the dealer was examining the carving with delight when he accidently pressed upon a carved rose which yielded and disclosed a secret receptacle in which was wedged a leather bag, containing Italian coins worth several thousand dollars. The money was promptly handed to the poor Hungarians whose amazement was so great that in all probability they have not yet recovered from it.

THE MESSAGE.

this session, and will, I trust afford you such information as to the condition and prospect of the various commercial, agricultural, manufacturing, mining, and other interests of the country, and contain such suggestions for statutory revision, as will practically aid your action upon this important subject.

"The revenue from customs for the fiscal year, ending June 30, 1876, amounted to $137,000,000. It has in the three succeeding years reached, first $186,000,000, then $198,000,000 and finally, as has been already stated, $220,000,000. The income from this source for the fiscal year which will end on June 30th, 1878 will doubtless be considerably in excess of the sum last mentioned. If the tax on domestic spirits is to be retained, it is plain, therefore, that large reductions from the customs revenue are entirely feasibly. While recommending this reduction, I am far from advising the abandonment of the policy of so discriminating in the adjustment of details as to afford aid and protection to domestic labor, but the present system should be so revised as to equalize the public burden among all classes and occupations, and bring it into closer harmony with the present needs of industry. I recommend an enlargement of the free list so to include within it the numerous articles which yield inconsiderable revenue; a simplification of the complex and inconsistent schedule of duties upon certain manufactures, particularly those on cotton, iron and steel, and a substantial reduction of the duties upon those articles, and upon sugar, molasses, silk, wool and woolen goods. If a general revision of the tariff shall be found to be impracticable at this session, I express the hope that at least some of the more conspicuous inequalities of the present law may be corrected before your final adjournment. One of them is specially referred to by the Secretary. In view of a recent decision of the Supreme Court, the necessity of amending the law by which the standard of color is adopted as the test of the saccharine strength of sugars, is too obvious to require comment."

THE POSTAL SERVICE.

The report of the Postmaster General gives evidence of the satisfactory condition of that department, and contains many valuable data and accompanying suggestions which cannot fail to be of interest. The information which affords that the receipts for the fiscal year have exceeded the expenditures must be very gratifying to Congress and to the people of the country. As matters which may fairly claim particular attention I refer you to his observations in reference to the advisability of changing the present basis for fixing salaries and allowances, of extending the money order system, of enlarging the functions of the postal establishment so as to be under its control. The telegraph system of the country from the last and most important recommendation. From this I must withhold my concurrence.

At the last session of Congress several bills were introduced into the House of Representatives for the reduction of letter postage to the rate of 2 cents per half ounce. I have given much study and reflection to this subject, and am thoroughly persuaded that such a reduction would be for the best interests of the public. It has been the policy of the Government from its foundation to defray, so far as possible, the expenses of carrying the mails by a direct tax in the form of postage, and it has never been claimed, however, that this service ought to be productive of a net revenue. As has been stated already, the report of the Postmaster-General shows that there is now a very considerable surplus in his department, and that henceforth the receipts are likely to increase at a much greater ratio than the necessary expenses. Unless some change is made in the existing laws, the profits of the Postal Service will, in a very few years, swell the revenue of the Government many millions of dollars. The time seems auspicious, therefore, for some reduction in the rates of postage. In what shall that reduction consist? A review of the legislation which has been had upon this subject during the last twenty years discloses that domestic letters constitute the only class of mail matter which has never been favored by a substantial reduction of rates. I am convinced that the burden of maintaining the service falls most unequally upon that class, and that more than any other it is entitled to present relief. That such relief may be extended without detriment to other public interests, will be discovered upon reviewing the results of former reductions. Immediately prior to the act of 1845, the postage upon a letter composed of a single sheet was as follows:

If conveyed 30 miles or less, six cents,

Between 30 and 80 miles, ten cents.

Between 80 and 150 miles, twelve and one half cents.

Between 150 and 400 miles, eighteen and three fourth cents.

Over 400 miles, twenty-five cents.

By the act of 1845 the postage upon a single letter, conveyed for any distance under three hundred miles, was fixed at 5 cents, and for any greater distance at 10 cents. By the act of 1851 it was provided that a single letter, if prepared, should be carried any distance not exceeding three thousand miles for 3 cents, and any greater distance for 6 cents. It will be noticed that both of these reductions were of a radical character, and relatively quite as important as that which is now proposed. In each case there ensued a temporary loss of revenue, but a sudden and large influx of business, which substantially repaired that loss within three years. Unless the experience of past legislation in this country and elsewhere go for naught, it may safely be predicted that the stimulus of 30 per cent. reduction in the tax for carriage would at once increase the number of letters consigned to the mails. The advantages of secrecy would lead to a very general substitution of sealed packets for postal cards and open circulars, and in divers other ways the volume of first-class matter would be enormously augmented. Such increase amounted, in England, in the first year after the adoption of the penny postage, to more than 125 per cent. A result of careful estimates, the details of which cannot be here set out, I have become convinced that the deficiency for the first year after the proposed reduction would not exceed 7 per cent. of the expenditures, or $3,000,000, while the deficiency, after the reduction of 1845, was more than 14 per cent, and after that of 1851, was 20 per cent. Another interesting comparison as afforded by statistics is furnished me by the Postoffice Department. The act of 1845 was passed in the face of the fact that there existed a deficiency of more than $30,000. That of 1851 was encouraged by the slight surplus of $132,000. The excess of revenue in the next fiscal year is likely to be $3,500,000. If Congress should approve these suggestions, it may be deemed desirable to supply to some extent the deficiency which must for a time result by increasing the charge for carrying merchandise, which is now only 16 cents per pound. But even without such an increase, I am confident that the receipts under the diminished rates would equal the expenditures after the lapse of three or four years.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

The communication which I made to Congress at its first session, in December last, contained a somewhat full statement of my sentiments in relation to the principles and rules which ought to govern appointments to public service. Referring to the various plans which had theretofore been the subject of discussion in the national legislature—plans which in the main were modeled on the system which obtains in Great Britain, but which lacked certain of the prominent features whereby that system was distinguished—I felt bound to intimate my doubts whether they or any of them would afford adequate remedy for the evils which they aimed to correct. I declared, nevertheless, that if the proposed measures should prove acceptable to Congress, they would receive the unhesitating support of the Executive. Since the suggestions were submitted for your consideration there has been no legislation upon the subject to which they relate, but there has meanwhile been an increase in the public interest in that subject, and the people of the country, apparently without distinction of party, have in various ways and upon frequent occasions given expression to their earnest wish for prompt and definite action. In my judgment such action should no longer be postponed. I may add that my own sense of its pressing importance has quickened by observation in a practical phase of the matter to which attention has more than once been called by my predecessors. The civil list now comprises about one hundred thousand persons, far the larger part of whom must, under the terms of the constitution, be selected by the President, either directly or through his own appointees. In the early days of the administration of the government the personal direction of appointments to the civil service may not have been an irksome task for the Executive, but now that the burden has been increased fully a hundred fold, it has become greater than he ought to bear, and it necessarily diverts his time and attention from the proper discharge of his duties, no less delicate and responsible, and which in the very nature of them cannot be delegated to other hands. In the judgment of not a few who have given study and reflection to this matter, their nature has outgrown the provisions which the constitution has established for filling, the minor offices in the public service. But whatever may be thought of the wisdom or expediency of changing the fundamental law in this regard, it is certain that much relief may be afforded, not only to the President and to the heads of the departments, but to Senators and Representatives in Congress, by discreet legislation. They would be protected in a great measure by the bill now pending before the Senate, or by any other which should embody its important features, from the pressure of personal importunity, and from the labor of examining the conflicting claims and pretensions of candidates. I trust that before the close of the present session some decisive action may be taken for the correction of the evils which inhere in the present methods of appointment, and I assure you of my hearty co-operation in any measures which are likely to conduce to that end. As to the most appropriate term and tenure of the official life of the subordinate employes of the Government, it seems to be generally agreed that whatever the extent or character the one should be definite and the other should be regulated by the zeal in the service of party or fidelity to the fortunes of an individual. It matters little to the people at large what competent person is at the head of this department or that bureau, if they feel assured the removal of one and the accession of another will not involve the retirement of honest and faithful subordinates, whose duties are purely administrative and have no legitimate connection with the triumph of any political party or faction. It is to this latter class of officers that the Senate bill to which we have already referred exclusively apply, while neither that bill nor any other prominent scheme for improving the Civil Service concerns the higher grade of officials, who are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

I feel bound to correct a prevailing misapprehension as to the frequency with which the present Executive has displaced the incumbent of an office, and appointed another in his stead. It has been repeatedly alleged that he has in this particular signally departed from the course which has been pursued under recent administrations of the Government. The facts are as follows: The whole number of Executive appointments during the four years immediately preceding Mr. Garfield's accession to the Presidency was 2,696. Of this number 244, or 9 per cent. involved the removal of previous incumbents. The rate of removals to the whole number of appointments was much the same during each of those four years. In the first year, with 796 appointments, there were 74 removals, or 9.8 per cent; in the second, with 919 appointments, there were 85 removals, or 8.5 per cent.; in the third, with 480 appointments, there were 48 removals, or 10 per cent.; in the fourth, with 429 appointments, there were 37 removals, or 8.6 per cent. In the four months of President Garfield's administration there were 390 appointments and 89 removals, or 22.7 per cent. Precisely the same number of removals (89) has taken place in the fourteen months which have since elapsed; but they constitute only 7 per cent. of the whole number of appointments, 1¼ within that period, and less than 2.6 of the entire list of officials (8,459), exclusive of the army and navy, which is filled by presidential appointment.

I declare my approval of such legislation as may be found necessary for supplanting the existing provisions of the law in relation to political assessments. In July last I authorized a public announcement that employes of the Government should regard themselves as at liberty to exercise their pleasure in making or refusing to make political contributions, and that their action in that regard would in no manner affect their official status. In this announcement I acted upon the view which I had always maintained and still maintain, that a public officer should be as absolutely free as any other citizen to give or to withhold a contribution for the aid of the political party of his choice. It has, however, been urged, and, doubtless, not without foundation in fact, that by solicitation of superiors, and by other means, such contributions have at times been obtained from persons whose only motive for giving has been fear of what might befall them if they refused. It goes without saying that such contributions are not voluntary. In my judgment their collection should be prohibited by law. A bill which will effectually suppress them will receive my cordial approval.

THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior, with its accompanying documents, presents a full statement of the varied operations of that department. In respect to Indians, nothing has occurred which has changed or seriously modified the views to which I devoted much space in a former communication to Congress. I renew the recommendations therein contained, as to extending to the Indian the protection of the law, as to allotting land in severalty to such as desire it, and making suitable provision for education of youths. Such provisions, as the Secretary forcibly maintains, will prove unavailing unless it is broad enough to include all who are able and willing to make use of it, and should not solely relate to intellectual training, but also to instruction in such manual labor and simple industrial arts as can be made practically available.

Among the important subjects which are included within the Secretary's report, and which will doubtless furnish occasion for congressional action, may be mentioned the neglect of the railroad companies to which large grants of land were made by the acts of 1862 and 1864 to take tittle toereto, and their consequent inequitable exemption from local taxation.

No survey of our national condition can fail to suggest inquiries as to the moral and intellectual progress of the people. The census returns disclose an alarming condition of illiteracy in certain parts of the country, where the provision for school is grossly inadequate. It is a momentous question for the decision of Congress whether immediate substantial aid should be extended by the general government for supplementing the efforts of private beneficence and of State and Territorial legislation in behalf of education.

The regulation of inter-state commerce has already been the subject of your deliberation. One of the incidents of the marvelous extension of the railway system of the country has been the adoption of such measures by the corporations which own or control the roads as has tended to impair the advantages of healthful competition, and make hurtful discriminations in adjustment of freightage. These inequalities have been corrected in several of the States by appropriate legislation the effect of which is necessarily restricted to the limits of their own territory. So far as such mischiefs affect commerce between the States or between any one of the States and a foreign country, they are subjects of national concern, and Congress alone can afford relief.

The results which have thus far attended the enforcement of the recent statute for the suppression of polygamy in the Territories are reported by the Secretary of the Interior. It is not probable that any additional legislation in this regard will be deemed advisable until the effect of existing laws shall be more closely observed and studied. I congratulate you that the commissioners, under whose supervision the laws have been put in operation, are encouraged to believe that the evil at which they are aimed may be suppressed without resort to such radical measures as in some quarters have been thought indispensable for success.

The close relation of the general government to the Territories preparing to be great States will engage your special attention. It is there that the Indian disturbances mainly occur, and that polygamy has found room for its growth. I cannot doubt that a careful survey of territorial legislation would be of the greatest utility. Life and property would become more secure. The liability of out breaks between Indians and whites would be lessened. The public domain would be more securely guarded, and better progress be made in in the instruction of the young. Alaska is still without any form of civil government. If means were provided for the education of the people, and for the protection of their lives and property, the immense resources of the region would invite permanent settlements and open new fields for industry and enterprise.

The report of the Commissioner of Agriculture presents an account of the labors of that department during the past year, and includes information of much interest to the general public. The condition of the forest of the country and the wasteful manner in which their destruction is taking place, give cause for serious apprehension. Their action in protecting the earth's surface in modifying the extremes of climate and in regulating and sustaining the flow of springs and streams, is not well understood, and the importance in relation to growth and prosperity of the country cannot be safely disregarded. They are fast disappearing before the destructive fires, and the Legislature requirements of our increasing population, and their total extinction cannot long be delayed unless better methods than now prevail shall be adopted for their protection and cultivation. The attention of Congress is invited to the necessity of additional legislation to secure the preservation of the valuable forests still remaining on the public domain, especially in the extreme Western States and Territories, where the necessity of the preservation is greater than in less mountainous regions, and where the prevailing dryness of the climate renders their restoration, if they are once destroyed, well-nigh impossible.

THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The report of the Department of Justice brings anew to your notice the necessity of enlarging the present system of federal jurisprudence, so as to effectually answer the requirements of the ever increasing litigation with which it is called upon to deal. The Attorney-General renews the suggestions of his predecessor that, in the interest of Justice, better provision than the existing laws afford should be made in certain judicial districts for fixing the fees of witnesses and jurors. In my message of December last I referred to pending criminal proceedings growing out of alleged frauds in what is known as the Star-Route Service of the Postoffice Depatment, and advised you I had enjoined upon the Attorney-General and Associate Counsel to whom the interests of the government were intrusted, the duty of prosecuting with the utmost vigor of the law all persons who might be found chargeable with these offenses. A trial of one of these offenses has since occurred. It occupied for many weeks the attention of the Supreme Court of this district, and was conducted with great zeal and ability. It resulted in a disagreement of the jury, but the cause has again been placed on the calendar, and will shortly be retried. If any guilty persons shall finally escape punishment for their offenses it will not be for lack of diligent and earnest efforts on the part of the prosecution.

I trust that some agreement may be reached which will speedily enable Congress, with the concurrence of the Executive, to afford the commercial community the benefits of a national bankrupt law.

OUR NAVY.

It appears by the Secretary's report that the available naval force of the United States consists of thirty-seven cruisers, fourteen single turreted monitors built during the rebellion, a large number of smooth-bore guns and Parrott rifles, and eighty-seven rifled cannon. The cruising vessels should be gradually replaced by iron or steel ships, the monitors by modern armored vessels, and the armament by high-power rifled guns. The reconstruction of our Navy, which was recommended in my last message, was begun by Congress authorizing in its recent act the construction of two large unarmored steel vessels of the character recommended by the late Navy advisory board, and subject to the final approval of a new advisory board, to be organized as provided by that act. I call your attention to the recommendation of the Secretary and the Board, that authority be given to construct two more cruisers of smaller dimensions and one fleet dispatch vessel, and that appropriations be made for high-power rifled cannon, for the torpedo service, and for other harbor defenses.

Pending the consideration by Congress of the policy to be hereafter adopted in conducting the eight large navy-yards and their expensive establishment, the secretary advocated the reduction of expenditures thereto to the lowest possible amount. For the purpose of affording the officers and seamen of the navy opportunities of exercise and discipline in their profession under appropriate control and direction, the secretary advises that the lighthouse service and coast survey be transferred as now organized from the treasury to the navy department, and he also suggests, for the reasons which he assigns, that a similar transfer may wisely be made of the cruising revenue vessels. The secretary forcibly depicts the intimate connection and interdependance of the navy and the commercial marine, and invites attention to the continued decadence of the latter, and the corresponding transfer of our growing commerce to foreign bottoms. This subject is one of the utmost importance to the national welfare. Methods of reviving American ship-building and of restoring the United States flag in the ocean carrying trade should receive the immediate attention of Congress. We have mechanical skill and abundant material for the manufacture of modern iron steamships in fair competition with our commercial rivals. Our disadvantage in building ships, is the great cost of labor, and in sailing them, higher taxes and greater interest on capital. While the ocean highways are already monopolised by our formidable competitors, these obstacles should, in some way, be overcome, and for our rapid communication with foreign lands we should not continue to depend wholly upon vessels built in the yards of other countries and sailing under foreign flags with United States steamers on the principal ocean lines of any foreign ports. Our facilities for extending our commerce are greatly restricted, while the nations which build and sail the ships and carry the mails and passengers obtain thereby conspicuous advantages, increasing their trade.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

The Secretary of War calls attention to the fact that an embarrassment is growing out of the recent act of Congress making the retirement of officers of the Army compulsory at the of 64. The act of 1878 is still in force, which limits to 400 the number of those who can be retained for disability, or upon their own application. The two acts when construed together, seem to forbid the relieving even for absolute incapacity of officers, who do not fall within the parview of the latter statute, save at such times as there chance to be less than 400 names on the retired list. There are now 420. It is not likely that Congress intended this result, and I concur with the Secretary that the law ought to be amended.

The grounds that impelled me to withhold my signature from the bill entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain work on rivers and harbors," which became a law near the close of your session, prompt me to express the hope that no similar measure will be deemed necessary during the present session of Congress. Indeed such a measure would now be open to serious objection in addition to that which was lately urged upon your attention. I am informed by the Secretary of War that the greater portion of the sum appropriated for the various items specified in that act remain unexpended.

CONCLUSION.

The closing year has been replete with blessings, for which we owe to the Giver of all good our reverent acknowledgment. For the uninterrupted harmony of our foreign relations; for the decay of sectional animosities; for the exuberance of our harvests, and the triumphs of our mining and manufacturing industries; for the prevalence of health, the spread of intelligence, and the conservation of the public credit; for the growth of the country in all elements of national greatness—for these and countless other blessings we should rejoice and be glad. I trust that under the inspiration of this great prosperity our Counsels may be harmonious and that the dictates of prudence, patriotism, justice, and economy may insure the adoption of measures in which the Congress and the Executive may heartily unite.

POSITIVELY CURED BY

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

First.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

Second.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

Third.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

Fourth.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

Fifth.

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

Sixth.

Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

If you feel drowsy, debilitated, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver, or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR or MEDICINE.

The cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World.

An EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen.

Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR. is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

PROVED A SUCCESS BY YEARS OF USE!

THE PASTILLE Prof. Harris' Radical Cure FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life, it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, DEC. 14th, 1882

BAXTER of the Press, has at last awakened from the stupor into which the shock of the late election had thrown him. The man who had not the courage to publish the election returns when his party was defeated, now shakes off his sackcloth and ashes, and rises among the ruins of his party, to apologize for the men and measures, that more than all else combined, contributed to his defeat. If it was not the blunders of such men as "Chase, Fessenden, McCullough, Sherman," and the late lamented Folger that brought defeat to his party, then what was it? It must be either, the blunders of the national republican management, or else mismanagement in his own state, and in his own precinct that has left him mourning on the lowest steps of the political throne on which he once sat as a local boss. These great changes do not come by accident. Mismanagement alone can account for them. And in what way can a party more completely feel the popular pulse, than by its management of the country's finances. It is not as the Press supposes, necessary to point out a better way. Any plan would be an improvement on some of the plans of his financial idols, from Chase to Folger. The lesson recently had, should have taught the Press, that something more manly than sneers, and more persuasive than ridicule, will be needed, or his party, will go as his precinct has, over to a better party.

REPUBLICAN members of congress and a republican administration, are likely to commence another war on the silver dollars. They are again raising the cry, that the government cannot get rid of them. Perhaps it, never occured to these brilliant financiers that they might use the twenty-seven millions in silver now on hand in paying so much of the public debt. A school boy who owed a big debt, and had part enough silver dollars to pay it, would certainly know what to do with his silver. It takes great financiers to go before their creditors every little while, and whine about the burden of having so much money on hand. Twenty-seven millions would reduce the debt by that amount and lessen the burden of annual interest over a million of dollars. It would be a blessing to the country, if some kind friend would tell these able financiers what to do with their funds.

THE transit of Venus across the face of the sun was watched last week all over the country. To the ordinary spectator with the smoked glass, it was merely a small black dot, creeping over the sun's disk, but to scientific men, it was important, as it furnishes the means by which the distances of the heavenly bodies are determined, as well as all the calculations based on these distances. One calculation, is already recorded, which places our distance from the sun, at about 91 millions of miles. The next transit will take place in 2004.

THE B. & O. Red Book, a notice of which we publish to-day in another column, is as the writer says: "a handy thing to have." It contains a full statement of the official vote of the different states in the recent elections. It will be a most useful book of reference to all who take an interest in such matters. And what American does not? It will well repay the trouble of sending to Mr. C. K. Lork, the general passenger agent of the B. & O. at Baltimore, for a copy. They are sent free.

THE American Newspaper Annual, published by N. Y. Ayer and Son, Philadelphia, is a work of sterling merit. It is no doubt, the most complete newspaper list ever published. It contains a short statement of the population, natural features and productions, of every county in the United States, as well as a full list of the newspapers published in each, and their respective circulation. To Newspaper men and advertisers it is invaluable.

The case of Fremont Young, charged with burglary, come up Tuesday in the United States court at Fort Wayne, and his trial was postponed on motion of the prosecuting attorney on account of the absense of John Haskin the principal witness against Young. Haskin, had been in Chicago, and the United States officers had offered him money to pay his expenses to Ft. Wayne to attend the trial, but for some reason did not come. It is likely that by the time the next trial comes off he will be forced to take the stand and then we shall know whether he has anything to disclose or is merely trying to do some one an injury for mere spite.

The large flouring mill of Duncan Bros., burned last Friday morning. It was not discovered in time to enable the fire department to do much, although they made every effort to save it. Little could be done except to save the buildings near by. The mill was insured for $6.000, but as it was worth at least three times that sum, the loss falls heavily on Duncan Bros. They had been putting in new machinery and were doing every thing to make it a first class mill. They are energetic pushing business men, and every one sympathises with them. This being the third mill burned in the town within a few years, the people will now have to look elsewhere for their milling, unless some one will take hold and build another.

Another Pioneer Gone.

John Brandon was born near Wheeling, Virginia, Aug. 14, 1798, and died at his home in Auburn, Saturday, Dec. 2, 1882, at the advanced age of 84 years, 3 months and 18 days.

At an early age he removed with his parents from Wheeling to Steubenville, Ohio, where he acquired his education. From thence he removed with his parents in 1807 to Stark county, Ohio, which was at that time an unbroken wilderness, with but few white settlers, but Indians were quite numerous. In the war of 1812 his father enlisted in the army, leaving to him, the eldest son, the care of the family when he was fourteen years of age. He taught school when about eighteen years old. In 1825 he was married to Mary Beard, rearing a large family of children. He served as constable a short time and was then elected justice of the peace, serving in that capacity for eighteen years continuously. He was elected sheriff of Stark county, in 1841, being commissioned by Thos. Corwin who was governor of Ohio at that time. He was elected a second term without opposition and was commissioned that term by Wilson Shannon, afterward governor of the territory of Kansas. He removed to DeKalb county in June, 1849, settling on the farm on which he died. He was elected commissioner in 1861, and served his full term of three years. During his term of office the present court-house was erected, he and J. M. Brumbeck and Amzi Seely constituting the board of commissioners. He afterwards filled several other important public positions, having served as deputy appraiser of the county and as assessor of Union township. He was, from the time he first settled here, a prominent citizen, always taking an active part in all that would tend to the prosperity of the community. He contributed largely of his means toward the building of the Ft. Wayne and Jackson road through this place. He was always liberal in his assistance to good works. His wife had preceded him to the grave by over nineteen years, she dying November 1, 1863.

A Good Foundation.

In American households the prevailing complaints are weakness of the stomach and its consequences, indigestion, nervousness and rheumatism. Such sufferers can lay a good foundation for health by using Parker's Ginger Tonic as it tones up the stomach and nerves, and keeps the kidneys active to carry off their foul matter.—N. O. Picayune. 49-4t

Free Of Cost.

All persons wishing to test the the merits of a great remedy—one that will positively cure Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, or any affection of the throat and lungs—are requested to call at F. E. Davenport's drug store and get a trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption free of cost, which will show you what a regular dollar-size bottle will do.

Holiday Excursions on the B. & O. R. R.

On December 22, 23, 24, 25, 29, 30, 31 and January 1, the B. & O. R. R., will sell round trip tickets, from all stations to all stations, on Trans-Ohio Divisions, including Wheeling and Chicago, at reduced rates; these tickets will be good returning until January 3d, inclusive.

IT is estimated on good authority, that the tariff on steel rails amounts to forty millions a year, and that it serves to "protect" only sixty thousand men, that being the number engaged in the steel rail factories of the United States and in running the coal and iron used in their works. The people are beginning to see how expensive it is, to protect a few of our citizens, who do not often get much better wages than those who are not protected. The difference in the price usually goes to the owners of the mills.

The New York Weekly Tribune says in regard to the Noyes Dictionary, Manufactured by L. W. LOST.

A small boy about the size of a man, barefooted with his father's boots on; had an empty bag on his back containing two railroad tunnels and a bundle of bang holes. He wore a mutton-chop coat with bean soup lining. He was cross-eyed at the back of his neck, and his hair cut curly. He was born several years before his elder brother, his mother being present on the occasion. When last seen he was shoveling wind off the state house with the intention of raising money enough to visit Peter's Mammoth Jewelry Shop, at Auburn, Ind., to purchase one of those far-famed latest style James Boss case with G. M. Wheeler movement $50 watch.

Wm. ELLERY
WALTHAM, MASS.

His aunt Peter would deem in a favor to learn of his whereabouts, knowing that if he visits Peter's jewelry shop he will jewelry him to death. Having heard from deaf and dumb persons that this is the best jewelry shop in Northeastern Indiana where can be found a large assortment of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Spectacles, Eyeglasses, Musical Instruments and Plated Ware, etc., of the very latest styles and the best materials for the least money; where all goods are warranted as represented or money refunded. Whoever will give information concerning the above child—he has black whiskers and mustache—will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. THEO. PETERS.

Notice of Appropriation Under the Railroad Act.

STATE OF INDIANA, } ss
DEKALB COUNTY, }
In the DeKalb Circuit Court—
The Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway
vs.
William D. Boyle and Alma Boyle, his wife, Thomas Blackwell and Warner Blackwell, William Williams and Matilda Koontz Williams, his wife, Mary Jane Hixon.

Be it remembered that on the 21st day of November, 1882, the above named plaintiff, the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific Railway, by Charles B. Stuart, W. V. Stuart and James E. Rose, its attorneys, filed in the office of the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court its instrument of appropriation in writing, in pursuance of an act of the General Assembly of the state of Indiana, entitled, "An Act for the Incorporation of Railroad Companies, approved May 11th, 1852," against said William D. Boyle, Alma Boyle, his wife, Thomas Blackwell and Warner Blackwell, William Williams and Matilda Koontz Williams, his wife, and Mary Jane Hixon; and also the affidavit of a competent person that said defendants, William Williams and Matilda Koontz Williams, are non-residents of the State of Indiana. Said instrument of appropriation gives notice to said defendants and to all persons claiming any right, title or interest in or to the property hereinafter described, of its intention to appropriate the lands and water running thereon, and the rights and interests therein, hereinafter described, to-wit:

A strip of land two hundred and seventy (270) feet wide off of the south end of the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of Section 10, Township 34 north, range 14 east, containing eight and sixteen one hundredths (8.16) acres more or less. Also a part of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of Section 10, Township 34 north, range 14 east, to-wit: Beginning at a stake in the line north and south through the center of Section 10, one hundred and thirty (130) feet south of the center of said section; thence west four hundred and seventy-nine (479) feet to the line between William H. Madden and William D. Boyle; thence south along said line six hundred and ninety (690) feet to the corner of the land of William H. Madden and Adam Smith in William D. Boyle's line; thence east four hundred and seventy-nine (479) feet, to the line north and south through the center of Section 10; thence north along said line six hundred and ninety (690) feet, to the beginning, containing seven and fifty-nine hundredths (7.59) acres more or less, being a part of Section 10, Township 34 north, range 14 east, in said County of DeKalb, State of Indiana.

Said real estate so described is necessary for said railroad company, for the purpose of a water station, side tracks and depot grounds. And plaintiff also filed with said instrument of appropriation in said clerk's office a plat and outline of the property above described.

And said railway, not having agreed with the owners for the purchase of said property, has taken this course in accordance with the provisions of said act hereinbefore mentioned. Said non-resident defendants are also notified that on Thursday, the 21st day of December, 1882, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, the said Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific railway will apply to the Hon. E. Wes. McBride, Judge of the DeKalb Circuit Court, at the court-house in Auburn, DeKalb County, State of Indiana, for the appointment of appraisers to assess the damages which said defendants and all other persons claiming any right title or interest in or to said real estate, will sustain by the appropriation of the property above described for the purposes within stated.

Witness my hand and the seal of said court, affixed at Auburn, DeKalb County, State of Indiana, on the 21st day of November, 1882.

[SEAL.] JOHN W. BAXTER, Clerk.

Notice of Administration.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned has been appointed by the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court of the State of Indiana administrator, de bonis non, of the estate of Elizabeth Shall, deceased, late of said county. Said estate is supposed to be solvent.

Auburn Courier.

Local and Miscellaneous.

—Christmas next.

—This is prayer meeting night.

—Holiday drummers are numerous.

—Begin to get ready to write it 1883.

—The snow melted considerably Tuesday.

—Health is very good in town this winter.

—Dealers in sleighbells are having a good take.

—Sheriff Boyle's son Jefferson will act as deputy.

—Enjoy the sleighing. Get your Susan and "fly."

—Look out for cloth swindlers. They are meandering this way.

—Mrs. John Getrost gave birth to a girl baby one day last week.

—The different railroads are arranging to change their time cards.

—Sleighing parties are all the go this week. Printers never sleighride.

—The twelfth volume of the Courier closes with this month. Settle up with us.

—There was not a potato in the retail market the latter part of last week.

—Snyder Bros. have sold fifteen wagons before the machine is in running order.

—We are again under obligations to Mr. Rummell for some of his choice celery.

—The Presbyterian choir is now complete—Hank Leah occupies the tenor corner.

—A. W. Bair will sell off his farm stock and implements at public sale Dec. 16.

—Country boys made a race track of Main street Sunday. Where is our marshal?

—Emanuel Getrost is not behind the counter at Miller & McKay's store since the change.

—The buckwheat season is here, but the market seems to lack a usual supply of that flour.

—Now the fire and life insurance agents are distributing their company's calander for 1883.

—The court-house business is all administered by democratic officials. "Hip, hip, hurrah!"

—Isaac and Silas Brandon have been appointed executors of the estate of John Brandon, deceased.

—A number of pumps were frozen last week, not being properly banked for the sudden cold wave.

—The life of the rabbit is not worth much. Every man and boy who has a gun and dog are after them.

—Wheat has been coming in slowly for a few weeks back, probably owing to the price—90c. per bushel.

—Mr. Humphrey has sold his interest in the Physicians drug store to Messrs. Casebeer & Matheny.

—The Old Neoteric club held a very pleasant and profitable dance at Ensley's Hall last Friday evening.

—Weamer is off getting new material and claims that he is going to enlarge and "improve" the Butler Review.

—The December moon will get full on christmas eve. We kind o' think several of the b'hoys will follow suit.

—Use the excellent sleighing while you can, for there is no telling how soon many of the roads will be impassable.

—Superintendent Rummel, at the poor farm, has taken up a stray hog that he wishes the owner would call for.

—Prof. E. K. Crocker with his trained horse had a cold time giving our citizens a free "show," Friday and Saturday last.

—Corn still holds good at thirty-five cents per bushel, and will probably stay about where it is until along toward spring.

—About five hundred men were discharged on the B. & O. road last Saturday. Construction trains were also abandoned.

—Jas. McClellan took in a large lot of fine porkers Saturday at the Wabash yards. The price paid was 5 @ 5½ per hundred.

—Steve. Girardot's horse, which the Courier spoke of as being kicked last week, has entirely recovered.

—We have been overhauling our subscription list, and if any one should miss the Courier we would like to be informed immediately.

—We have not received an account of any one freezing to death during the recent cold snap, but it certainly wasn't the fault of the weather.

—We have been doing considerable printing for Thos. H. Sprott in the last few days, indicating that his business is in a thrifty condition.

—Fur trimmings in great variety at Ensley & Harter's.

—Pure mixed candies very cheap at Ensley & Harter's.

—Buy your Candies and Toys of Ensley & Harter.

—Dr. LaRue the only reliable specialist in this country, has located at the Auburn House, Auburn, Ind., until March 1, 1883. tf

If your hair is coming out, or turning gray, do not murmur over a misfortune you can so easily avert. Ayer's Hair Vigor will remove the cause of your grief by restoring your hair to its natural color, and there with your good looks and good nature.

—Hon. J. B. Stoll, proprietor of the [illegible], has been sick. Papers report him gaining gradually this week.

—Every old overcoat was brought out last week and the rude blasts of winter allowed to daily with its frayed edges.

—Dr. Swarts has taken advantage of frozen ground to move a fine, large maple and plant it in front of his new building.

—Our merchants are making fine displays for the holidays, and the school boy looks admiringly in the show window as he passes by.

—Walnuts retail at forty cents a bushel; hickory nuts, fifty; eating apples, seventy-five, and dried apples seven cents per pound.

—The sleighing has been splendid, and the farmer has been making good use of it by drawing wood and timber for the different factories.

—The town was fairly alive with sleighing parties passing through town for several evenings. They sang like a camp meeting on runners.

—The writing and singing school teachers are now working their ps and qs in the rural districts, to obtain hash during the winter months.

—County Clerk Husselman purchased an 8x10 pane of glass, "smoked it" and amused the passers-by, last week, by having them gaze at the transit.

—The matrimonial tidal wave is expected this way about the holidays to capture some of our fair daughters and sons who now boast of personal liberty.

—The vulgarity and numerous oaths indulged in by young hoodlums while upon the streets is certainly disgusting to the ears of more refined people.

—If the farmers want good prices and honest weights let them market their corn at the Wabash elevator, where Col. Watson will greet all cordially.

—Fremont Young, who is said to be connected with the postoffice burglary at Waterloo, recently, has his trial in the United States court at Fort Wayne this week.

—Mr. L. Spitler, the south end butcher, is meeting with encouragement from our citizens. He is a fine gentleman and should get his share of the patronage.

—Sherm. Hollister is arranging a Christmas tree. He looks forward to a pleasant visit from his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Cobb, during the holidays.

—The Courier has turned out a large amount of job work in the last week. Our new type suits the patrons for style and beauty in letter heads, bill heads, cards, etc.

—We have printed a lot of subscription receipts but, of course, will have no use for them unless our patrons walk up to the captain's desk and put up for back dues.

—Court begins the third Monday of this month. The docket contains the usual number of cases, and it is hoped that Judge McBride will cut them down during the term.

—The rascally George Hazzard is out of the Angola jail on a bond of $500 This county and Steuben is having a hazzarous time handling and feeding that blundering swindler.

—The president's message will be found on the inside pages of this issue. Of course everyone will read it from beginning to end as we only get that "choice" article once each year.

—During the holidays our readers will have friends visiting with them, and if they will take the trouble to give us the names and addresses of their guests we will be obliged.

—It is said on the streets that John McClellan and his wife have "made up," come to another conclusion, feel kind o' sore over what happened—that is—Oh! you know how 'tis yourself.

—The marvelous deeds of the setter dog and the wonderful double-shots of the $5 breech-loader, are certainly amusing to a fellow who never fell off a rail fence or run a rabbit out of a thicket.

—Elkhart papers claim to have a lady one hundred and two years old who writes letters every week to her children. We don't think newspaper reporters would lie about a lady, young or old.

—While it is necessary to have hot fires this cold weather, every one should be very careful about the safety of their chimneys and stove-pipes. Auburn can't afford a fire engine, you know.

—J. A. Cowan, esq., has purchased the property erected last summer by John Canon, corner of Tenth and Van-Buren streets. Its a desirable location and on the making of one of the finest thoroughfares in town.

—John Eakenberger has gone over the hill to the poor house where he will put up for the winter, prefering a comfortable bed there to that of piano boxes and hay-mows here in town. John has a congressman's head.

—Underwear to suit everybody at Ensley & Harter's.

Mr. B. F. Kusling, druggist, Logansport, says: "I never sold a remedy that gave such universal satisfaction as Brown's Iron Bitters.

—The failure of Strauss & Wolf, merchants at Butler, and the "slick" game they tried to play on their creditors, by selling out to one Levi, has terminated in a law suit and will be tried at our next term of court.

—Hank Leah has got J. L. Davis' buggy repaired in fine style, but he is at a loss to know how to bring it from Eckhart's shops to where the vehicle belongs. He says he'll never draw it over with that'ere horse.

—Last week the fine barn of Capt. Hiram Lidings, at Warsaw, was destroyed by fire. Five head of horses, including a fine mare and colt valued at $500, were burned. Indications are that the barn was set on fire.

—J. R. Cosper is certainly ahead on the pig question. He killed three pigs last Friday that dressed 960 pounds. They were only fifteen months old and had been taken off the pasture and fed only six weeks. We call that a success.

—The ladies who neglected to take care of their house plants last week are terrible huffy because they didn't know it was going to be so cold. Let them either correspond with Vennor or do away with flower beds in the parlor.

—Mrs. Fraley, a German lady, living in the old Fox property, is the mother of a boy baby. When the little one was but a week old she had it taken to the church and baptised, such being the custom of the German Reform organization.

—There is no doubt but that a gang of burglars are organized in Waterloo, or near the town. Depredations of this kind occur there very frequently and it seems impossible to catch the thieves or find any clue whatever to their place of concealment.

—Elmer Weaver, living north of town, is a young man of considerable nerve and pluck. He made regular trips to town with wood during the cold days of last week, and if it hadn't been for him the Courier would have been frozen out Friday.

—The last of this month the grand jury will make their usual investigations, and the boys who trifle with the law will have to "go forthwith" and give away all the mean transactions that they have been engaged in during the past several months.

—The Republican started out on our new commissioners by asking them to put an iron fence around the court yard. Don't get the gentlemen excited at their first meeting, brother "Kal," although this is a very "appropriate" time of the year for building fences.

—Auburn has a number of poor families that it would be well for the christian and philanthropist to look after. There are families who have no father to supply their wants, and the writer is pretty positive that they suffer more or less this cold winter weather.

—Jack Ralston's delivery horse ran away last Friday morning and would probably have been running yet if Wash Askew hadn't stopped him. There was nothing broken about the vehicle, not even a basket of hen fruit that sat in the back end of the buggy box.

—Some of our young kids are becoming addicted to gambling. A south end juvenile lost seventy cents in less than fifteen minutes last Saturday, and it would be well for parents to take the matter in hand and try to save what remains of the wayward sons.

—One week from next Monday is the day when a fellow's dulcinea puts a pair of slippers on the christmas tree with a little note in the toe reading: "Dearest, please accept the present, and let them keep fresh in your memory the exorbitant love for you now blazing in the breast of your true little girlee, Hanna Jones.

—D. D. Snyder and his brother William, who have formed a partnership in the hub and spoke and wagon factories, will be ready for business about the middle of January. Bill is a new beginner in business transactions, in which he is now engaged, but he has one of the best financiers in Northern Indiana at his back.

—During the cold days last week we were out of wood in the Courier office. Quite awhile ago a number of our subscribers promised to bring us a load after their corn was cut. Now, there are only two conclusions to draw, and they are, that there is a good deal of corn that is not cut in this county, or somebody is working on the Ananias plan.

—While the old Neoteric dance club were hopping about Ensley's hall Friday evening, with their white gloves and paper slippers, another party of happy lads and lasses were shaking the fantastic toe (with pants in their boots) to the tune of "Coming thro' the Rye," at Riley Zimmerman's residence in Rainier's addition. We now have four dance clubs.

—Ed. Baker wishes to thank his many friends in Auburn and vicinity for their liberal patronage during the past eight years, and that by attention to business hopes to share their support in the future. He always keeps on hand a supply of fresh baked bread, pies and cakes; also fancy cakes made to order. Good lunches with hot coffee and oysters by the can, quart or dish.

A TURNOUT THAT SHOWS TASTE AND PRIDE.

It has been noticeable to us, and we have also heard many compliments on the streets, that since Eugene Trout has been installed manager of Casebeer & Matheny's livery barn the rigs make quite a different appearance. The old stock of horses has been disposed of, and high-headed, fine looking steeds have taken their places. They have added a number of elegant cutters to their stock and those that enjoy the festivities of a rattlin' good sleigh ride should order rigs from that barn. They have nice, comfortable and easy-riding conveyances for commercial men and always send out polite and accommodating drivers. We heartily recommend the gentlemen and their "turnouts" to the readers of the Courier, and bespeak for them the public patronage that their enterprise and fair dealing call for.

—A saw mill has been added to the new wagon factory. They buy a tree in the woods, draw it in and manufacture a wagon, in due time, therefrom. The capacity for turning out these vehicles will be five each day for the present and eventually about eight or nine.

—About this time of the year parties begin to lay plans to gull and rob business men with holiday schemes. They are not half what they represent them to be and not half circulated. Business men should be careful not to waste money on these advertising frauds, but call at the Courier office and get a good, square, honest job of work.

—Young Zollars, a "promising" type of manhood, was dispatched with a horse and buggy to bring Miss Jennie Cowan from her school at the Junction to their residence on Van Buren street, Tuesday evening. By a clumsy handling of the lines he dumped the vehicle upside down into a ditch, causing painful bruises to the lady. He should be sent with a hand-sled next time.

—S. Fulton, of this township, had a narrow escape last Tuesday from a serious accident. Himself and family were returning from Concord township that evening after dark when the wagon ran into a chuck hole and the seat breaking, Mrs. Fulton was thrown over the wheel upon the hard ground. Fortunately she sustained no serious injury except a sprain of the left shoulder.

—Will some one please rise up and explain what the "Owl Club" is? We have an organization of this kind that meets every holiday during the year. We are told that no females can become members, and the initiation fee for gentlemen is $1500. We are unable to learn whether it is conducted for the benefit of the poor or to trample down intemperance—perhaps neither one—and are anxious for information.

Joy and temperance and repose
Slam the door on the doctor's nose.

We have always stood in with these two lines of poetry until last Friday morning. When the clock was pointing out five a. m. and the weather "freezing out zero," our eye caught sight of Doc. Cowan coming in from the rural "destricks" wrapped up in bed quilts and the old horse a blowin'. On occasion of this kind pill peddlers should be greeted with a hearty welcome and receive full pay, kill or cure.

—W. Vandermark was not so awfully awful crazy on all matters. Two years ago when he was taken to the asylum he placed two drawing-knives over a rafter in the Saginaw depot, and on his return last Thursday he went to the identical spot, without any hesitation, and took therefrom the knives. The only thing that he could not remember was a board bill of twenty-four dollars that he owed Mrs. Bitner. The lady keeps boarders for her support and as Vandermark has the wherewith in his wallet to pay the bill he should be made to put up.

—It is most too cruel for men to hitch horses about the court square, after driving them several miles, and not blanket them. We have noticed these animals covered with frost and shivering with cold, standing at the railings along Seventh street and blankets lying in the sleds they were hitched to. This class of horsemen is generally found in the brine shops playing "freeze out" for hot whisky, while their teams stand in a prominent part of town furnishing gossip and receiving pity from many of our citizens. There should be a town law passed protecting dumb brutes from the usages of their heartless masters.

—The M. E. district conference that met here last week was a very pleasant and profitable one. A large amount of business was done. The lectures were unusually well prepared and well delivered. The discussions were animated and interesting. An unusual number of members were present and all seemed interested. Among the number present we noticed Rev. McCarty, of Garrett; Rev. C. W. Church, of the Centenary church of Fort Wayne; Rev. S. B. Clark, of Warsaw; Rev. Waltz, of Waterloo; Rev. E. P. Church, of Cosset, and others whose names we do not recall. We hope the reverend gentlemen will visit our place at town again some time in the near future.

IN a letter recently published in the Chicago Tribune, Hon. Thomas J. Wood states that he favors a revision of the tariff that will be just to all the interests involved. In this declaration Mr. Woods plants himself squarely upon the doctrine of the Republican platform of this State in the late campaign.

THE President don't want any more river and harbor appropriations from Forty-seventh Congress, having more of that kind of appropriations at his disposal now than he has use for. The Congressmen who passed the last river and harbor bill over his veto find a very bitter pill in his message showing that there is nearly $18,000,006 river and harbor appropriations yet unexpended.

GOV. FOSTER of Ohio, in an interview, says he will recommend to the Legislature the taxation of the saloons, and a uniform taxation, at a certain rate in agricultural communities. He will recommend that the premises upon which saloons are located be held for the tax, that is, that the State of Ohio shall look to the premises or owner, and he can arrange with the tenant. The Governor thinks such a law will be held to be constitutional. He says the sentiment of the people of Ohio is overwhelmingly for some sort of restriction of the evils of the liquor traffic.

THE case of R. Porter Lee, President of the First National Bank of Buffalo, N. Y., who was recently sentenced to ten years' imprisonment for embezzlement, presents some very striking features. The amount embezzled was $400,000. The actual loss to the bank by fraudulent transactions of one or more of its officers was shown on the trial to have reached the large sum of $600,000. The convict is only 32 years of age, rose by degrees from messenger to President by his merits, and was esteemed most highly by the entire community. He was no less prominent in religious than financial circles. His downfall is a startling exposure and a terrible warning against yielding to the first approaches of infidelity to a trust, public or private. It would seem from the testimony that the trouble began in straining a point to retain a good customer.

THE MESSAGE.

Annual Message of the President of the United States

On the Reassembling of the Forty-seventh Congress for its Last Session.

WASHINGTON.

December 4.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The House was called to order by the Speaker at 11 o'clock and after prayer in which the chaplain tenderly alluded to the deaths since the adjournment, the roll was called, showing 202 present. The following were sworn in as members to fill vacancies: Hitt, of Ills., to succeed Hawk, Reese, of Georgia, to succeed Stephens, Shelly, of Ala., to succeed himself. Calkins, of Indiana, presented a memorial against the swearing in of Shelly, but asked for no action beyond reference. So ordered. A resolution was adopted providing for the appointment of a committee to inform the President and Senate that the House is ready to proceed to business. The Speaker presented the report of the tariff commission, which, on motion of Kelly, was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. The President's message was read.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

In opening his message President Arthur called attention to the gratifying condition of our foreign affairs; intercourse with other powers has continued to be of the most friendly character.

"The claim of this nation in regard to the supervision and control of any inter-oceanic canal across the American Isthmus, has continued to be the subject of conference. It is likely that time will be more powerful than discussion in removing the divergence between the two nations whose friendship is so closely cemented by the intimacy of their relations and the community of their interests."

This government has counselled Russia that measures be taken to suppress the prosecution of the Hebrew race, and there is reason to believe that the time is not far distant when all faiths within her borders will secure toleration. The formation of treaties in regard to the protection of trade marks, patented articles and the rights of manufacturers in accordance with the agreement reached by the international conference at Paris, in 1880, is receiving attention. On the subject of protection of submarine cables, the minister to France was requested to attend the conference at Paris which has it under consideration, and two scientists were designated to attend a convention to adopt a unit of measure of electric force.

"In view of the frequent occurrence of conferences for the consideration of important matters of common interest to civilised nations respectfully suggest that the executive be invested by Congress with discretionary power to send delegates to such convention, and that provision be made to defray the expenses incident thereto."

With regard to the differences with Spain, respecting a certicate of naturalization, and the fees charged by Spain and its colonies upon United States vessels, amounting to a considerable export duty, no adjustment has been made. It is recommended that an appropriation be made to enable the Government to accept the invitation of the German Government to participate in an International Exhibition of cattle at Hamburg, in July, 1883. Suitable mention is made of the death of Mr. Marsh, Minister to Italy. Treaties with Belgium and Switzerland have added to the extradition crimes, and measurably stopped the exportation of criminals and paupers to America.

"In the interest of justice towards Chili and Japan, I trust that the question of the return of the indemnity fund to the Government of these countries will be reached at the present session, the satisfactory solution of which I have already recommended, and which has recently been foreshadowed by Congressional discussion."

Congress is asked to consider whether it desired in the Chinese restriction bill, to prohibit the mere transit of Chinese from one country to another, across or through the United States. The question has been raised. The Government has been asked to aid in the amicable settlement of the boundary question between Liberia and the British possession in Sierre Leone.

The reciprocity treaty with Hawaii will become terminable after September, 9, 1883, on two months' notice by either party. While certain provisions of that compact may have proved onerous, its existence has fostered commercial relations which it is important to preserve. I suggest, therefore that early consideration be given to such modifications of the treaty as seem to be demanded by the interests of our people.

"In view of our increasing trade with both Hayti and San Domingo, I advise that provision be made for diplomatic intercourse with the latter by enlarging the scope of the mission at Port-au-Prince. I regret that the claims of a certain class of American citizens against the government of Hayti have thus far been urged unavailingly.

"A recent agreement with Mexico provides for the crossing of the frontier by the armed forces of either country in pursuit of hostile Indians. In my message of last year, I called attention to the prevalent lawlessness upon the borders, and to the necessity of legislation for its suppression. I again invite the attention of Congress to the subject. A partial relief from these mischiefs has been sought in a convention which now awaits the approval of the Senate, as does all others touching the establishing the international boundry between the United States and Mexico. If the latter is ratified, the action of Congress will be required for establishing suitable commissions of survey. The boundry dispute between Mexico and Guatemala, which led this Government to proffer its friendly counsels to both parties, has been amacably settled."

It is recommended that the United States be represented at Caraccas on the occasion of the celebration of the anniversary of Bolivar; in July, 1883, when a statue of Washington will be begun and an Industrial Exhibition opened. The relations with South American States, and the recall of the invitations to the proposed peace congress, are discussed at length in the terms given in the advance synopsis of the message.

Missions of Denmark and Venezuela at this capital has been raised in grade; Switzerland has created a plenipotentiary mission to this government; and an embassy from Madagascar, and a minister from Siam will shortly arrive. Our diplomatic relations have been enlarged by the establishment of relations with the new kingdom of Servia, by the creation of a mission to Siam, and by the restoration of a mission to Greece. The Shah of Persia has expressed his gratification that a charge de affaires will shortly be sent to that country, where the rights of our citizens have been hitherto courteously guarded by the representatives of Great Britain.

Under the agreement reached in Paris in 1875, for the interchange of official papers, the Smithsonian Institute will undertake the co-operation of our government under the direction of the Secretary of State. The President favors the reorganization of the diplomatic and consular service on a strictly salary basis, and the Secretary of State will at an early day, present a plan for such reorganization.

FINANCIAL OPERATIONS.

The President presents the figures from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the operations of that department, which are given in the report of the Secretary, published elsewhere. He commends the Secretary's views in respect to the likelihood of serious contraction of the circulation, and the modes by which that result may be averted. He also joins in the Secretary's recommendation concerning the coinage of silver and the retirement of silver certificates.

"You can not fail to note with interest the discussion by the Secretary as to the necessity of providing by legislation some mode of freeing the treasury of an excess of assets. In the event that Congress fails to reach an early agreement for the reduction of taxation I heartily approve the Secretary's recommendation of immediate and extensive reduction in the annual revenues of the government. It will be remembered that I urged upon the attention of Congress, at its last session, the importance of relieving the industry and enterprises of the country from the pressure from unnecessary taxation. It is one of the tritest maxims of political economy that all taxes are burdensome, however wisely and prudently imposed, and though they have always been among our people wide differences of sentiment as to the best method of rising the national revenues, and, indeed, as the principles upon which taxation should be based, there has been substantial accord in the doctrine that only such taxes ought to be levied as are necessary for a wise and economical administration of the Government. Of late, the public revenues have far exceeded that limit, and unless checked by appropriate legislation, such excess will continue to increase from year to year."

THE TARIFF AND THE REVENUE.

"Upon the showing of our financial condition, at the close of the last fiscal year, I felt justified in recommending to Congress the abolition of the internal revenue taxes, except those upon tobacco in its various forms, and upon distilled and fermented liquors, and except, also, the special tax upon the manufacturers and dealers in such articles. I venture now to suggest that unless it shall be ascertained that the probable expenditures of the Government for the coming year have been underestimated, all internal taxes, save those which relate to distilled spirits can be prudently abrogated. Such a course, if accompanied by a simplification of the machinery of collection, which would than be easy of accomplishment, might reasonably be expected to result in diminishing the cost of such collection by at least $2,500,000 and in the retirement from office of from 1,500 to $2,000 persons. The system of excise duties has never commended itself to the favor of the American people, and has never been resorted to except for supplying deficiencies in the Treasury when by reason of special exigencies, the duties on imports have proved inadequate for the needs of the Government.

"The sentiment of the country, doubtless commends that the present excise tax shall be abolished as soon as such a course can safely be pursued. It seems to me, however, for various reasons, so sweeping a measure as the total abolition of internal taxes would for the present be an unwise step. Two of these reasons are deserving of special mention. First, It is by no means clear that even if the existing system of duties on imports is continued, without molification, those duties alone will yield sufficient revenue for all the needs of the Government. It is estimated that $100,000,000 will be required for pensions during the coming year, and it may well be doubted whether the maximum annual demand for that object has yet been reached. Uncertainty upon this question would alone justify, in my judgment, the retention for the present of that portion of the system of internal revenue which is least objectionable to the people. Second, a total abolition of the excise taxes would almost inevitably prove a serious, if not an insurmountable, obstacle to a thorough revision of the tariff, and to any considerable reduction in import duties.

"The present tariff system is in many respects unjust. It makes unequal distributions, both of its burdens and its benefits. This fact was practically recognized by a majority of each House of Congress in the passage of the act creating the tariff commission. The report of the commission will be placed before you at the beginning of

WASHINGTON.

Mr Springer Tuesday made his first bid for the support of the new members in his Speakership contest by the introduction in the House of a resolution to have printed 2,000 copies of the rules, saying the new members would need them to prepare for their duties next session. His resolution obtained little support, however, and was defeated by a large vote.

The Secretary of the Interior rendered a decision to-day sustaing the position of the Commissioner General of the Land Office in the matter of Byron Roberts & Co vs Henry Foote et al., denying the request of the former that the filings of the defendant be cancaled, and that plaintiff be permitted to make proof and payment for the land embraced in his survey. The matter at issue in this case is a title to Pagosa Mineral Springs, in Colorado. The Secretary holds that the question of the non-mineral character of the land had been fully settled heretofore.

A report is received at the Indian Office from Fort Custer to the effect that a party of twenty Indians, supposed to be Piegan's, made a raid upon the Crow scouts near the Little Big Horn and ran off 400 head of ponies; that the Crows pursued the marauders, recovered the stolen stock and killed, two of the thieves; and that the Piegans threateded to steal the Crows poor this Winter.

The question of Chinese emigrants was informalty discussed at the Cabinet meeting Tuesday.

New postoffices were established Tuesday at Murnane and Cloud, Col.; Ealston and Hacraft, Ky.; Mohawk, Ind., and Hawkeye, Mo.

The preliminary examination of Dickson, charged with attempting improperly to influence the Star Route jurors, began Tuesday. McNelly, one of the jurors, testified that the accused, while in the jury room, read newspaper articles to the jurors, the majority of the panel having voted to hear it read.

McNelly, after a long examination respecting the paper read (which contained an article about the alleged interview with Bowen at Driver's restaurant, during which he is said to have attempted to bribe Dickson) said "the paper was introduced to influence the jury but it didn't do it." McNellys statements were corroborated by other witnesses, and Alexander, the stenographer, then testified to the correctness of the printed records of the star route trial.

A commission representing all the larger post-offices, has assembled at the Post-Office Department, to regulate uniformity in stationery and other supplies, instead of allowing Postmasters to contract separately for the same.

Ninderman, in the Jeannette court to-day, continued his narrative of the journey South. He detailed the separation from DeLong, upon the occasion, when he and Noros started in search of the settlement in a very pathetic manner, and explained how they prepared a boot sole by soaking and burning until they were able to eat it with their willow tea. After this was exhausted, the ate deer bones.

Why Bill Nye Wept.

Laramie Boomerang.

In justice to ourselves we desire to state that the Cheyenne Sun has villified us and placed us in a false position before the public. It has stated that while at Rock Creek Station in the early part of the week we were taken for a pea-nutter and otherwise ill-treated at the railroad eating corral and omelet emporium, and that in consequence of such treatment we shed great scalding tears as large as watermellons. This is not true. We did shed the tears as above set forth, but not because of ill-treatment on the part of the eating-house proprietor.

It was the presence of death that broke our heart and opened the fountains of our deep, so to speak. When we poured the glucose syrup on our pancakes the stiff and cold remains of a large beetle and two cunning little cockroaches fell out into our plate, and lay there hushed in an eternal repose.

Death to us is all-powerful. The king of terrors is to us the mighty sovereign before whom we must all bow, from the mighty emperor down to the meanest slave—from the railroad superintendent, riding in his special car, down to the humblest humorist—all alike must some day curl up and die.

This saddens us at all times, but more particularly when death, with his remorseless lawn-mower, has gathered in the young and innocent. This was the case where two little twin cockroaches, whose lives had been unclouded by wrong and selfishness, were called upon to meet death together. In the stillness of the night, when others slept, these little affectionate twins crept into glucose syrup and died.

We hope no one will misrepresent this matter. We did weep and are not ashamed to own it. We sat there and wept until the table cloth was wet for four feet and the venerable ham was floating around in tears. It was not for ourselves, however, that we wept. No unkindness on the part of an eating-house proprietor ever provoked such a tornado of woe. We just weep when we see death and are brought in close contact with it. And we were not the only one that shed tears. Dickenson and Warren wept, strong men as they were. Even the butter wept. Strong as it was it could not control its emotions.

We don't very often answer a newspaper attack, but when we are accused of weeping till people have to take off their boots and wring out their socks, we want the public to know what it is for.

A Temper and a Fortune.

Boston Post.

A few years ago a young man named John Peck secured a situation as conductor on the Metropolitan Railway, Boston, and it chanced that during the first days of his service his car was several times thrown from the track by rails becoming misplaced. One day the end of the rail flew up and became fast in the car truck. He lifted and pushed, and lost his temper in the effort to get the car on the track and the rail in place again, and at night was so disgusted with his work that he threw up his situation. But his experience set him to thinking, and in a few days he called on an officer of the road and said that he could make a "chair" that would hold the rails firmly together at the joints.

The officer laughed at his confident assertions, and told him that he had heard similar stories dozens of times. But the ex-conductor exhibited his model drawing, which appeared so promising that he was told to go ahead and make a trial. The result was a complete success.

To-day John Peck's patent railway chair, for which he secured his first patent in 1875, his second in 1876, and his third and last in 1881, is used by all the street railways in Boston, and by many of the great steam railways of the United States.

The President's Horses

The Washington writer of the Courier-Journal says there are thirteen horses in the President's stable, five of which belong to the government, and are used in connection with the President's office for work in the grounds. A pair of them are sometimes driven in a plain, close carriage, belonging to the office in which, when one of the President's secretaries or clerks is sent on business any great distance, he rides.

Of the eight horses which belong to President Arthur, four are those which he uses when he drives four-in-hand in his landeau, or when attached to either of his other carriages, they are driven in pairs. These are bays, and have this week been clipped. They are Hambletonians. I hear. The President, his son, his daughter, and his private secretary, each have a riding horse which they use. The President's is a sorrel, and is named "Coquette." That on which his little daughter rides very well is a black, and was her dead mother's riding horse. It is named "Sallie Howe," possibly for the New York lady who was, I am told, one of Mrs Arthur's bridesmaids, and was at one time the wife of Colonel Frank Howe. The horse "Alain," the President's son rides, is a chestnut. He has a pair of horses for driving to a one-seated buggy. One of these is named Olga, the other Hero. The name of each horse is over its stall.

There are also two fine dogs belonging to the establishment—one a valuable setter, the President's own property, and the other a shepherd dog, little Miss Nellie's pet. The latest addition to the number of carriages is the "Brewster Victoria," mentioned in a former letter. It is very handsome and has the President's coat-of-arms on it. The ground of the shield is red and the devices thereon are in colors. Above is an eagle. The motto is "Impelle Obstanti." This carriage has light springs and a rumble.

When President Arthur decided to drive a four-in-hand he made the colored coachman, Albert, blissfully happy. He used to be General Grant's coachman, and remembers with pride driving his four-in-hand, in which Mrs. Grant and others of the family rode, but General Grant rarely. Albert took such delight in driving four horses that a lady who was out with Mrs. Grant one day told me that they were driven past all the houses where negroes lived in the city, instead of spending all the time on the principal streets. Mrs. Grant explained that Albert was so proud of driving her with four horses that he never failed to show the establishment off to the colored people of the town. Albert was retained by President Hayes at General Grant's request, and often implored him to set up a "four-in-hand," and was greatly grieved that he would not. He has been retained ever since the Grant administration, and now feels his glory restored to him.

Religious Intelligence

An English clergyman has substituted zoedone for wine in the Holy Communion. He is to be called to account for it.

The Provincial Sabbath-school Association held its annual convention at Brampton, Canada, on the 24th of October.

"General" Booth, of the Salvation Army, has given an order for several thousand pairs of leggings, which will, in future, form part of the Army uniform, and will be called "Salvation leggings.

The Rev. Washington Gladden, who is one of the most brilliant writers in the Congregational Church, will probably leave Springfield, Mass., to accept the call of the First Congregational Church of Columbus.

A little steamboat will soon be sent by the English Baptist Missionary Society to the Congo River, to be used in mission work among the native Africans who live along the banks. Her name is Peace.

The Guardian, of London, condemns the mania for pictures of scenes of bloodshed and carnage, which now seems to possess all classes in English society. Such a passion, it thinks, is unworthy not only of a Christian, but even of a civilized nation.

A Rhode Island clergyman, not having had time during the week to write a new sermon, was compelled to fall back on an old one, which he rigged up with a new text and application and knocked out part of "fourthly" and "fifthly." On announcing his text he remarked to his hearers: "I have an old sermon for you to-day; but it has a new collar and wristbands, and I don't believe you can tell where he stitches are set in." The congregation listened to the old discourse as patiently as if it was new for them that week.

Formerly it was the practice of among Congregational churches to settle pastors for life or during good behavior and acceptable service. This practice has so greatly been broken in upon by the system of temporary pulpit supplies that now a majority of the weaker churches in small towns procure their pupplies from time to time much as cooks, coachmen, or servants are engaged. The pastorial office is thus sinking into a condition of inferiority. Even such a strong concern as the First Church of Norwalk, Conn., has, in procuring a new minister, invited the Rev. Mr. Williams to become "acting pastor" for a limited term. This arrangement gives a chuch even a better opportunity to get rid of an undesirable minister than the Methodist system affords. But it has the effect of discouraging the ministers who seek permanence, and of keeping them and their families in an uneasy condition.

The Planets in December.

Providence Journal.

December presents an exceptionally beautiful programme for planetary students. Venus leads off with a grand transit and inferior conjunction. Jupiter comes next in reaching on the 18th the most important epoch of his course, opposition with the sun, when the eastern sky seems to glow as he comes above the horizon. Saturn pursues the even tenor of his way high among the stars. Mars shows a throb of life as he arrives at conjunction with the sun, and gives promise of some time reaching opposition, when his tiny moon will come to view. Mercury is busy enough to deserve the title of messenger of the gods. The conjunction of Venus, Mercury and Mars with the sun and with each other shows how near they are to the great luminary and how nearly their tracks touch upon each other. Once more our neighbor the moon, tries to prove that she is not a member of the dead-world brotherhood to which she has been ruthlessly consigned. Mr. Trouvelot adds his weighty authority to the theory that there are evidences of movement on the lunar disc: This keen-eyed, reliable observer has seen lunar landscapes lose their distinctness as if light clouds were floating over them, and two of the great craters illumined with a rare vapor slightly tinged with purple. Here are indications of an atmosphere of some kind, thus conflicting with established belief. But the astronomical mind is receptive and willing to accept anything new and strange on sufficient proof.

Turning Out the Money Changers.

Springfield Republican.

The question of church entertainments is many-sided. It is said that a well-to-do and prominent member of a leading church in this city made the women of the congregation a peculiar offer the other day. They came to ask him to help in carrying forward a series of sociables and suppers during the winter, and he spoke in this fashion: "You know that I am opposed to your scheme as far as eating in the church is concerned. I do not believe in turning the Lord's house into a restaurant. You remember that he once drove the money changers out with his own hands and turned over their tables. I belive in coming together in the church for social purposes, but as for your suppers and entertainments, how much do you make by them?" The women replied about $30 a month, taking the season through. "Well, now," resumed the brother, "I will tell you what I'll do. For the year 1883 I will give your society $30 a month on condition that no food whatever is to be served in the church.' What was said next has not been reported, and a good many people are curious to see what the result will be.

Draft on the Imagination.

Austin Siftings.

"My father," said Glihooly, solemnly, "was more sensitive to colds than anybody I ever knew. The slightest exposure gave him a cold."

"That must have been very disagreeable."

"Indeed it was. He never could sit near a draft for a minute without catching cold. I remember on one occasion he was sitting in the office of a friend, when all at once my father began to sneeze. He insisted that there was a draft in the room. Every effort was made to discover where the draft was, in vain. The doors and windows were closed, and there was no fireplace, but my father kept on sneezing and insisting that there must be a draft in the room, and so there was."

"Where was it?"

"In an envelope on the table, and it was only a little draft for ten dollars."

A Beecher Fish Story.

New York Herald.

Mr. Beecher told a pretty hard "fish story" to his people at the Plymouth prayer meeting yesterday evening. He said that whenever his father went down to Guilford, Conn., to visit his wife's relatives he used to think of nothing but finding a good place to catch trout. In a certain pool there was a particularly large trout and for several years the old gentleman vainly tried to hook him. Finally, during one of his annual visits, he saw the old trout's fins sticking out of the water in a shady spot under the bank. The reverend angler bethought him that he had heard or read that fish could be tickled and captured with the hand. He softly slipped a hand into the water under the motionless fish and slightly tickled its belly with his finger-tips. It shot a little distance off, but returned almost immediately, and Pere Beecher moved his hand lightly along the scales until approaching the gills he slipped his forefinger in and jerked the surprised trout high and dry upon the bank. The fish weighed three pounds. Mr. Beecher told this story with such dramatic force, and so cleverly imitated the old gentleman peering into the pool and reaching his arm down into the water, that when he pulled it up a rustle of excitement was noticeable in the meeting. Mr. Beecher's unconscious mimicry in another part of his discourse led him to make a pose and a grimace which would have delighted one of his caricaturists. He said his Friday night congregation was like a brood of callow robins sitting in a nest with eyes shut and mouths open waiting for him to drop in a worm. Mr. Beecher shut his own eyes, opened his mouth to the fullest, and sat for a moment with face upturned, looking as much like a robin as was possible for a gentleman of his age and full habit.

Mr. Butler's Novel Funeral.

Syracuse Herald.

The funeral of Joseph W. Butler was held in Fulton yesterday. In accordance with a frequently-expressed desire of the deceased man, no minister was present. A choir, composed of four neighbors, sang the hymn, "Nearer my God to Thee," at the conclusion of which Mr. L. B. Babcock, of Volney, arose and in brief words paid a tribute to Mr. Butler as a man of honor and intellect, and one who lived according to the dictates of honest convictions. Then 'Squire Tinker spoke of the exemplary life he had lived during his acquaintance with him for more than half a century. Other friends testified to his worth. His son, Jay S. Butler, then spoke of his father's leading characteristics.

Farm Notes.

Geraniums of the Zonale section may be kept through winter in a dormant state by hanging them up in a dry, cool cellar, free from frost. It is a better plan, however, to bury the roots in sand or common garden soil. They need not be watered.

An experienced pear grower prefers Bartletts for profit. Their only drawback is a tendency to blight, but they pay for themselves and for new trees to put in their places. The Bartlett is not the highest flavored pear, but it is good enough to be always profitable.

An eminent horseman gives it as his experience, after twenty years of trial, that a tired horse can be best refreshened and strengthened by giving him a quart of oat meal stirred in a pail of water. This fits its stomach for stronger food, slakes its thirst and it is infinitely better than pure water.

Nitrates are largely produced in soils by the action of the living ferment, says Sir J. B. Lawes, on the nitrogenous organic matter and amonia; nitrification takes place chiefly in the upper layer of soil, and is greatly tavored by the presence of water and by the summer temperature.

As a remedy for hog cholera, a correspondent of the Journal of Agriculture recommends a half teaspoonful of carbolic-acid in a gill of milk. This remedy, he states, has been successful in every case, and not only cures but stops the spread of the disease. It is administered from the mouth of a long necked bottle.

Poultry manure is nearly equal to guano, and the value of the quantity annually derived from a single foul is about fifty cents, fully one half the feed. five hens will make about one barrel of manure, and on farms where large numbers of poultry are kept the importance of this fact should not be overlooked every ounce should be saved.

New England poultry shows are as common as agricultural fairs, and there should be exhibitions everywhere. In consequence of the interest thus taken in poultry the annual sales of pure-bred fowls in that section amount to a large sum. Just at this season of the year the fowls are shedding feathers, but about Christmas the shows will be in full operation.

Writing of the wonderful butter said to have been made by "Jersey Belle, of Scituate"—twenty five pounds in a week—a sarcastic critic says: "There is a good deal in knowing when to weigh. Butter can be worked just enough to make it look dry and hold together on the scales, and still be 25 per cent. water and buttermilk. That's the time to weigh for a big record."

Take any old barrels' set them in the ground, the chine just coming to the top of the ground (no head on either end of the barrels.) Into these headless barrels put beets, turnips, cabbages, etc. As the weather grows cold cover the barrels with loose boards. Whenever it is cold enough to freeze hard throw over them enough hay or straw to keep out the frost.—Western Agriculturist.

The Wichita (Kan.) Eagle says that W. L. Mullen has had on exhibition at that place a heifer which, for size, eclipses anything yet heard of. She is creamy white, of perfect form, and weighs 3,000 pounds. She measures seventeen feet from nose to tip of tail, ten feet in girth, and stands seventeen hands high. She is simply a magnificent beauty. She was raised in Cowley county, that State, and is four years old.

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman takes a sensible view of the value of large or small potatoes for seed. His opinion is that there is no difference in any respect, except the fact that the large potatoes furnish more nourishment to the younger plants at the beginning. For sandy soils he recommends the planting of whole tubers without cutting, afterward thinning out all the plants in the hill to a single one.

Always select good ears of corn for seed—the best you can find. Take them from stalks, bearing two or more ears. "A perfect ear," says the American Agriculturalist, "has all rows perfect, a small but end, the cob well tipped out with grain and covered with husks, the kernel uniform and well ripened." The careful selection of ears is one of the ways of improving the quality and increasing the quantity of future crops.

The following is clipped from the Shoe and Leather Reporter: "Our own country possesses resources for raising meat for all Europe, but we have not made much headway in that direction. The ratio of increase in our population for the past ten years, as shown by the census returns, has been very much larger than the gain of cattle, and the demand for fresh beef for the table grows greater every year. There have been few lines of business so profitable in the United States for the past ten years as cattle raising, and, were it to increase a hundred per cent., we believe there would be found an immediate and paying market here and abroad for the mean hides and skins."

DR HARTER'S

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristical of other iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice. DR. ROBERT SAMUELS, 2106 Wash. Avenue. ST. LOUIS, MO., NOV. 28th, 1881.

It gives color to the blood, natural healthful tone to the digestive organs and nervous system, making it applicable to General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Prostration of Vital Powers and Impotence.

PLAIN TRUTHS

The blood is the foundation of life, it circulates through every part of the body, and unless it is pure and rich, good health is impossible. If disease has entered the system the only sure and quick way to drive it out is to purify and enrich the blood.

These simple facts are well known, and the highest medical authorities agree that nothing but iron will restore the blood to its natural condition; and also that all the iron preparations hitherto made blacken the teeth, cause headache, and are otherwise injurious.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS will thoroughly and quickly assimilate with the blood, purifying and strengthening it, and thus drive disease from any part of the system, and it will not blacken the teeth, cause headache or constipation, and is positively not injurious.

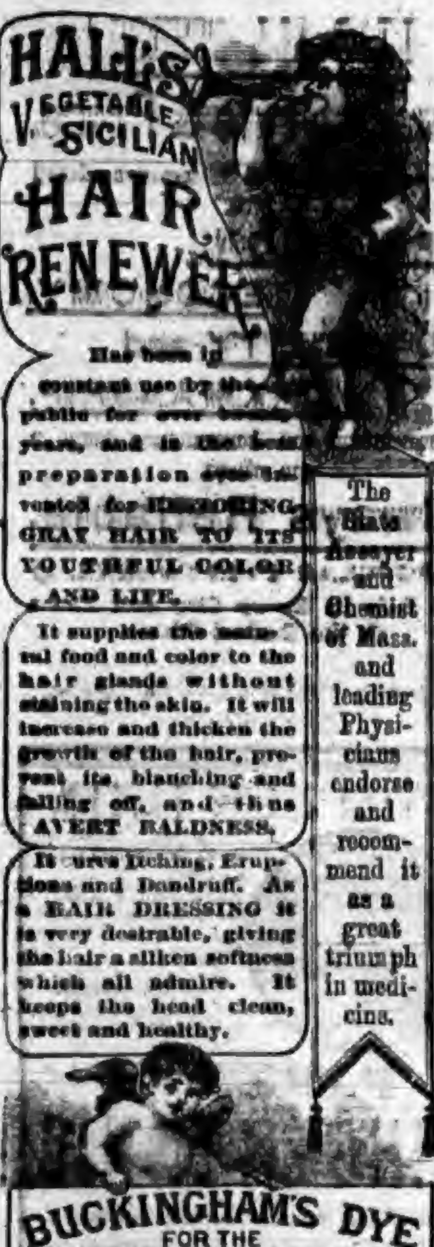
Gents:—Upon the recommendation of a friend I tried BROWN'S IRON BITTERS as a tonic and restorative for my daughter, whom I was thoroughly convinced was wasting away with Consumption. Having lost three daughters by the terrible disease, under the care of eminent physicians, I was loth to believe that anything could arrest the progress of the disease, but, to my great surprise, before my daughter had taken one bottle of BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, she began to mend and now is quite restored to former health. A fifth daughter began to show signs of Consumption, and when the physician was consulted he quickly said "Tonics were required;" and when informed that the elder sister was taking BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, responded "that is a good tonic, take it."

ADORAM PHELPS.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS effectually cures Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Weakness, and renders the greatest relief and benefit to persons suffering from such wasting diseases as Consumption, Kidney Complaints, etc.



HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER

Has been in constant use by the public for over twenty years, and is the best preparation ever invented for RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOR AND LIFE.

It supplies the natural food and color to the hair glands without staining the skin. It will increase and thicken the growth of the hair, prevent its blanching and falling off, and thus AVERT BALDNESS.

It cures Itching, Eruptions and Dandruff. As a HAIR DRESSING it is very desirable, giving the hair a silken softness which all admire. It keeps the head clean, sweet and healthy.

The State Assayer and Chemist of Mass. and leading Physicians endorse and recommend it as a great triumph in medicine.

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE FOR THE WHISKERS

will change the beard to a BROWN or BLACK at discretion. Being in one preparation it is easily applied, and produces a permanent color that will not wash off.

Hermann and the Hucksters.

Hermann the magician has been playing off a few tricks upon the hucksters of the St. Louis market. These dealers in eggs, vegetables and game were astonished at the treasures the magician found in their "truck," and the boys were delighted at the free exhibition of Hermann's skill.

"How do you sell these soup bunches?" said he, picking up a peck measure full of herbs.

"Two cents apiece," replied the ample matron behind the layout.

"That's cheap," said Hermann, "very cheap," and then suddenly looking into the heart of one of the bunches, he pulled out a plethoric wad of twenty dollar bills.

The woman made a grab for the money, but as suddenly as it appeared it vanished, and she looked from the bunch to the magician, and from the magician to the bunch, in a puzzled way. "Go 'way with your foolishness!" she at last said, and declined to be further interested.

A couple of stalls below there was a great selection of eggs. These at once caught Hermann's eye. "Are these eggs fresh?" he enquired of the damsel in charge.

"Yes, sir."

He picked up one and rattled it beside the woman's ear. She started back at the peculiar metallic sound, whereupon he smiled accusingly at her, broke the egg and took out two five dollar gold pieces laying in the yolk. She started, and he got ten dollars more out of another egg.

After collecting about thirty in this way, she suddenly declined to have any more eggs broken.

As she spoke, a blue tongue of flame sprang out of a score of eggs on the tray, and the whole party started back in affright. The flame died away, and the woman turned on Hermann with almost a curse, "You're a sorcerer!"

A stall or two lower down, Hermann picked up a cabbage and asked the man if it was not imprudent to leave his vegetables exposed in that way.

The man glowered at him, and said he was not there for joking.

"What will you take for the cabbage?" enquired the maestro.

"Five cents."

The money was passed, and the cabbage became the property of the magician. Taking a knife, he cut it open, and before the astonished gaze of the multitude there lay a perfect nest of treasures.

Hermann deliberately began to fill his pockets, first with a wad of bills, a hundred dollar one on the outside, then a gold watch and chain, next two or three diamond rings, and finally a heaping handful of twenty dollar gold pieces, and last of all an United States bond for one thousand dollars.

Powers of description fail to paint the changes which passed over the huckster's face as this find was being appraised and pouched by the magician. Doubt, fear, avarice and despair flitted one after another over his countenance. And at last, when the cabbage was evidently empty, he flung himself on a bench behind the stall and refused to be comforted.

"That's a pretty good trade," said Hermann; and the boys cheered him to the echo.

A few paces further on was a game-dealer's stand, and here the miracle of the day was performed.

Picking up a rabbit which was laying without any head on the pavement, Hermann asked the man how long it had been dead.

"Only a day or two."

"Smell it," said Hermann.

The reporter sniffed at it, and it certainly was gamy.

"Don't you know how to freshen up animals?" said Hermann to the man.

And he took the rabbit, doubled it up and back, put it down on the pavement with a head on it and evidently alive. The dead rabbit at once leaped in among the boys, who chased it and finally brought it back, in sore need of the kindly magician's good offices again.

Then he took a dove from the cote over the stand, deliberately wrung its neck, pulled off its head and threw it to the owner, and before he had time to examine it, returned him his pigeon none the worse for wear.

By this time the crowd was so large that locomotion was impossible, and with a quizzical glance at his admirers, Hermann hurriedly boarded a car and disappeared towards the south.

Rothschild's Start.

Rothschild was the third son of a banker at Frankfort. "There was not," he said, "room enough for us all in the city. I dealt in English goods. One great trader came there who had the market all to himself; he was quite the great man, and did us a favor if he sold us the goods. Somehow I offended him, and he refused to show us his patterns. This was on Tuesday. I said to my father, 'I will go to England.' I could speak nothing but German. On Thursday I started. The nearer I got to England the cheaper goods were. As soon as I got to Manchester I laid out all my money, things were so cheap, and made good profit. I soon found that there were three profits—on the raw material, the dyeing, and the manufacturing. I said to the manufacturers: 'I will supply you with the material and dye, and you supply me with the manufactured goods.' So I got three profits instead of one, and I could sell goods cheaper than anybody. In a short time I increased my £20,000 to more than £100,000.

"My success all turned on one maxim. I said, I can do what another man can, so I am a match for the man with the patterns, and all the rest of them. Another advantage I had—I was an off-hand man; I made a bargain at once. When I settled in London, the East India Company had £800,000 of gold to sell. I went to the sale and bought it all. I knew the Duke of Wellington must have it for the pay of his army in the Peninsula. I had bought a great many of his bills at a discount. The Government sent to me and said they must have it. When they got it they didn't know how to get it to Portugal. I undertook all that, and sent it through France, and that was the best business I ever did."

A Remarkable Poem to which 38 Poets Contribute a Line Each.

The following very remarkable little poem is a contribution to the San Francisco Times from the pen of Mr. H. A. Deming. The reader will see that each line is a quotation from some one of the standard authors of England and America. This is the result of years of laborious search among the voluminous writings of thirty-eight leading poets of the past and present. The number of each line refers to its author below:

1. Why all this toil for triumphs of an hour?
2. Life's a short summer, man's a flower.
3. By turns we catch the vital breath and die.
4. The cradle and the tomb, alas! so nigh.
5. To be is better far than not to be.
6. Though all men's lives may seem a tragedy;
7. But light cares speak when mighty griefs are dumb,
8. The bottom is but shallow whence they come.
9. Your fate is but the common fate of all;
10. Unmingled joys here no man can befall.
11. Nature to each allots its proper sphere;
12. Fortune makes folly her peculiar care.
13. Custom does often reason overrule,
14. And throws a cruel sunshine on a fool.
15. Live well; how long or short, permit to heaven;
16. They who forgive most shall be most forgiven.
17. Sin may be clasped so close we cannot see its face—
18. Vile intercourse where virtue has no place.
19. Then keep each passion down, however dear.
20. Thou pendulum betwixt a smile and tear.
21. Her sensual snares let faithless pleasure lay,
22. With craft and skill to ruin and betray.
23. Soar not too high to fall, but stoop to rise.
24. We masters grow of all that we despise.
25. Oh, then, renounce that impious self-esteem!
26. Riches have wings and grandeur is a dream.
27. Think not ambition wise because 'tis brave;
28. The paths of glory lead but to the grave.
29. What is ambition? 'Tis a glorious cheat—
30. Only destructive to the brave and great.
31. What's all the gaudy glitter of a crown?
32. The way of bliss lies not on beds of down.
33. How long we live, not years but actions tell—
34. That man lives twice who lives the first life well.
35. Make, then, while yet you may, your God your friend,
36. Whom Christians worship, yet not comprehend.
37. The trust that's given guard and to yourself be just,
38. For live we how we can, die we must.

1, Young; 2, Dr. Johnson; 3, Pope; 4, Prior; 5, Sewell; 6, Spencer; 7, Daniel; 8, Sir Walter Scott; 9, Longfellow; 10, Southwell; 11, Congreve; 12, Churchhill; 13, Rochester; 14, Armstrong; 15, Milton; 16, Bailey; 17, Trench; 18, Somerville; 19, Thompson; 20, Byron; 21, Smollett; 22, Crabbe; 23, Massinger; 24, Cowley; 25, Beattie; 26, Cowper; 27, Sir Walter Devenant; 28, Gray; 29, Willis; 30, Addison; 31, Dryden; 32, Francis Charles; 33, Watkins; 34, Herrick; 35, William Mason; 36, Pill; 37, Dana; 38, Shakespeare.

Paid For Holding Her.

The affection between stage lovers is often so well acted that no one suspects the real feeling which exists between them. A writer in the New Orleans Democrat says he knew two actors of the opposite sex who positively disliked each other, but were forced by their parts into the most devotional tenderness of conduct. One night as he was playing at love she was to rush into his arms; being a true artist, she did her work with energy, and between speeches he muttered, "You need not swallow me." She replied, "You are too bitter a dose." While holding her in fond embrace, wrapped in delicious transport, he growled in a whisper, "Don't lean so hard against a man." With her head in tender repose upon his breast she retorted, "You are paid for holding me, and I intend you shall earn your salary." They never made up and never married. She married another actor, and clings still to the dislike for the man with whom she plays.

The Brooklyn Supreme Court has decided that a child born to a man and woman who supposed themselves legally married is a legitimate child, even though said marriage was illegal. The question arose in a case wherein both parents thought themselves rightly married, whereas it was shown that the woman had never been divorced from a man to whom she had been married and who was then living. The second marriage was annulled and the child awarded to its father.

The Deaf Landlord.

"Poker Bill," of Virginia, Nev., tells, in the Enterprise, of that city, of a boarding-house keeper who is afflicted with a very convenient degree of deafness. He hears only when it is to his advantage to do so, and is apt to misunderstand to his own interest. Bill gives the following instance of this perversity: "When I went in to breakfast yesterday morning, I went up to the counter and asked my landlord if anybody had called to ask for me.

"Says the landlord: 'It will be just $35 at the end of this week.'

"Said I: 'Has there been a man in here to see me this mornin'—a one-eyed man?'

" 'Glad you want to pay it now; I need money very badly,' said my landlord.

"Then I yell: Has anybody asked for me this morning?"

" 'No, I don't want to sue you, but I shall expect the money next Monday sure,' says my landlord.

" 'All right, I'll pay you,' yelled I.

" 'You needn't yell in that way, I'm a little deaf, I know, but I can still hear it thunder,' says my landlord.

"Then comes in another boarder, and says to the landlord—'good mornin.'

" 'I'll see in a moment,' says the landlord; I believe it's only about $15,' so it goes on right along.

"I'm going to pay up next Monday," said Bill, "and you bet I'll never stop with another deaf landlord—not if I know it."

An Impossibility.

Deserving articles are always appreciated. The exceptional cleanliness of Parker's Hair Balsam makes its popular. Gray hairs are impossible with its occasional use. 49-4t.

I was troubled with Chronic Catarrh and gathering in my head, was very deaf at times and had discharges from my ears, besides being unable to breath through my nose. Before the second bottle of Elys' Cream Balm was exhausted I was cured, and to-day enjoy sound health. C. J. Corbin, 923 Chestnut st., Field Manager Philadelphia, Pub. house Pa. 48-2t.

—Hundreds have discovered that moulding public opinion is a mighty poor business. Moulding stove lids pays much better, and don't cause half the wear and tear on the moulder's system. —We want to remind our readers that the twelfth volume of the Courier ends with the present year, and we would like to have all our patrons settle up with us between now and the first of January. They should consider the care, toil and anxiety the editor has been to the past year in furnishing them with a home paper — one that gives the news from all parts of the country—and has furnished them with many local items of great importance, at the time. These matters should be remembered now, and all should show their appreciation by squaring up their accounts and beginning anew with the year 1883.

—The called meeting of the N.-E. Ind. Agricultural Society, met at Winslow's Hall, in Waterloo at 2 p. m. Dec., 14, and was called to order by the president, J. N. Chamberlain. The other members present were, C. K. Baxter, Cyrus Bowman, John C. Biedler, John Leas, W. H. Leas, R. N. Crooks, R. G. Daniels, J. E. Thompson, A. McCoy, S. Duck, B. F. Kennedy, Henry Hood, E. B. Shoemaker and J. A. Barns. C. K. Baxter and J. A. Barns were appointed secretaries as the secretary A. B. Stevens was absent. The president then stated briefly that the object of the meeting was to discuss roads and the road law. Mr. Thomson spoke on this subject. He thought the great defect in the new law was the lack of funds as this was the first year of its trial. He thought the new law should have given poor men a chance to work out their poll-tax as they could do under the old law. Some who could not pay money now found difficulty to pay at all. So a part of the tax is lost. Though politics should be ignored and the best man selected for road superintendent, he favored a petition to have the law amended. Mr. Crooks thought the past season was a bad one for the new law, as with considerable wet weather and but little means not much could be done. Some of the work done, was done well, other jobs were let too late in the season and so did but little good. But as this happened even under the old law, and also that some of the poll tax had been usually lost, he was in favor of giving the new law a fair trial, and believed it would succeed. Experience would enable the superintendents to do better. Daniels thinks the new law is no improvement on the old, and thinks it should be repealed. McCoy thought the new law better than the old, but admits that poor work has been done. Put good men into the office and so change that tax may be worked out, and law will do well enough. Shoemaker, thought the poll tax could be worked out under the new law, and the matter was discussed by W. H. Leas, C. K. Baxter and others. A copy of the law was then procured, and on reading, it was found that the tax could not be worked out in the ordinary way. The matter of using wagons with wider tire was discussed, McCoy, said that in Pennsylvania wide tires only, were allowed on certain turnpikes and thought the plan a good one. Bowman agreed with McCoy as to tires. Hood would like to try the new law awhile before giving it up. Crooks said, that under the old law his township had 29 supervisors. Some were good and others not. Many of them had no tax to work but poll, and the rest of their time must be paid for at $1.25 a day, and was more expensive than now. It also took more tools under the old law, as each district must have some. So thinks the new law a saving. John Leas thought the new law a failure and that there is two much temptation for a superintendent to work the roads near his home. Shoemaker said, "Let party go and get a good man. We are apt to take too narrow a tire, so to speak." McCoy did not mean to complain of the men, but the law may be defective. Thomson spoke in favor of wide tire. Hood noticed the roads that lumbermen used this summer were greatly benefited by extra width of the tires used. Spoke also, of roads in west side of St. Joe county, and east side of Laporte county, and said many were using wide tires there. John Leas thinks the new law will make it nearly impossible to get full road tax out of poor men, and boys just over age. W. H. Leas prefers the old law. Says many of the old roadmasters are appointed under the new law, and so there is but little change except they now report to the superintendent instead of the trustee. Thinks the premiums offered by the Agricultural Society did good. Thomson thinks the superintendents have done well under the circumstances. Daniels believes we cannot tell which plan costs the most, until we try longer. Shoemaker thinks each township should have a building centrally located, in which to store road tools and material. Chamberlain expressed regret, that more of those interested in the discussion were not present. It takes experience, energy and brains to be a good roadmaster. If we get a good superintendent, he will have a good influence on his assistants. Thinks with J. S. Boots, "Get the roads out of the water and the water out of the roads" is a good rule. As to broad tire, some might object if compelled to use them, and so we should feel our way with care. On motion of Mr. Baxter the sense of the meeting was taken as to the new law, and resulted in six for the new law and five against. Some did not vote, as had no experience with the new. Thomson offered a resolution that a petition should be sent to the legislature, asking an amendment, allowing tax to be worked out. Carried. It was decided to procure copies of the road laws of Ohio and Michigan. Meeting adjourned to meet in three weeks, and on every second week thereafter.

THE Missouri Grand Lodge of Freemasons has passed a vote making it a violation of Masonic morals to be engaged in the traffic of liquor as a dram-shop-keeper, and all persons engaged in such business are declared to be ineligible as petitioners for the mysteries of Masonry within that grand jurisdiction.

THE Rev. James Freeman Clarke, of Boston, in his Thanksgiving sermon, made a rather pungent allusion to those flunkeys in the "upper classes" who neglect their political duties and speak scornfully of the Republic and go to Europe for their opinions. Some Bostonians are thinking the remark personal.

OWING to land frauds of startling magnitude in connection with the Osage Indian lands of Kansas, the United States Commissioner of the General Land Office has issued an order suspending all cash entries made by single men since June 23, 1881, where the lands lie within the counties of Sumner, Harper, King, and Comanche.

THE law in Massachusetts makes professional gambling a hazardous business, and its provisions are such that police officials can not protect the gamblers. If a loser of money does not sue for its recovery inside of three months any other person may do so, bringing the suit against the gambler or the owner of the premises, either of whom is liable in an amount three times the money lost.

THE Methodists claim much credit for the election of Pattison in Pennsylvania. Bishop Bowman says: "I told the Democrats in Pennsylvania that they had some very good men there, but they had the Methodist Church to thank for their success. When they wanted an available man they had to take a Methodist minister's son. Dill, whom they ran last time, was one; Pattison is another." He spoke in very high terms of Pattison.

A CONTRIBUTOR to the Scientific American suggests the employment of electricity and instantaneous photography for the detection of burglars. He would have an arrangement by which the tread of a burglar on entering a house or approaching a safe shall cause the glare of an electric light to be suddenly thrown on him, and at the same time expose a plate in a camera focussed on the spot, thereby producing an instantaneous photograph which will be left behind and aid in bringing him to justice.

IT is believed that Congress will adopt the recommendation of the President and Treasury officials, to limit the coinage of standard silver dollars to the actual needs of the country, instead of continuing the present plan of coining them at the rate of $2,000,000 a month and piling them up uselessly in the vaults of the Treasury. Of the vast number of these dollars coined so far, not one-third are now in circulation or are wanted, but are now cumbering the Treasury vaults.

THE Postoffice appropriation bill provides for the extension of the carrier system to ten or twelve cities of 20,000 inhabitants or a revenue from the postoffice of $20,000 a year, and for the reduction of the amount for star-routes of $2,250,000. In other words the policy of the bill is to provide for greater mail facilities for cities already well supplied, and less facilities for rural districts already poorly supplied. A reversal of this policy is the thing needed in the interests of justice to al the people, and the member of Congress representing such a district, who does not make an effort to secure such reversal will be recreant to his trust.

THE Chicago News indignantly comments on a recent occurrence as follows: "The beauties of lynch law, as exemplified in the chivalric region across the Ohio, was, for perhaps the fiftieth time, shown near Macon, Ga., yesterday. A criminal assault had been made on a little girl. Of course a "nigger" did it, and each hero of the region drew his pistol and constituted himself into a court and jury. A "nigger" was found in a cabin, was promptly taken out, tied to a tree and his body riddled with bullets. After the Southern blood had been cooled, it was found that the murdered man was wholly innocent of the crime for which he had been murdered. But as the murderers were all respectable whites, and the victim only a nigger, there will be no occasion for further reference to the subject."

STATE AUDITOR WOLFE, in his annual report, shows that the net cash receipts from all sources, were $3,067,843.50, which, with the addition of the cash balance from last year, makes the total receipts of the State Treasury $3,804,494.22. The warrants drawn on the State Treasury from the several funds for the year, reach a total sum of $3,563,711.44, and the total of the net cash disbursements is $3 110,424 70, leaving the cash balance in the Treasury $698,009.52. The State's indebtedness is the same as last year, $971,825.13. The report recommends that the Legislature make provision for some $500,000 of the bonded indebtedness, shortly to become due, by the establishment of a sinking fund, upon the basis of a 2 per cent. special tax. It also makes suggestions for needed amendments in the tax and assessment laws, as well as in the insurance laws, the latter with a view of putting the mutual insurance corporations that have sprung up in all parts of the State within the last two or three years under official supervision.

THE Chicago Journal very sensibly says: "When President Arthur's recommendation to amend the constitution is acted upon, we hope Congress will not stop by simply allowing the President to veto certain items in an appropriation bill and approve of others, but allow the people to amend the organic law in other essential particulars. The Presidential term should be made six years, instead of four, and the country be thus in a measure relieved of the excitement and needless turmoil that inevitably follow in the wake of a general election. With the tenure of the President's office covering a period of six years, the members of the House elected for three years, and the Senators holding six years as at present, and making the President ineligible after two terms, would relieve the country of much political agitation, and impart to our laws and institutions a greater degree of stability.' The "two terms" for the President in the above is probably a slip of the pen. One Presidential term of six years is the chief reform suggested in the list, as it would secure an Executive devoted exclusively to the success of his only administrative opportunity.

LIEUTENANT GENERAL SHERIDAN'S explorations in Wyoming, Idaho and Montana last August and September, of which he has recently sent a report to the Adjutant General, suggested to his mind a new Indian policy. The Crow Nation numbers 3,470 souls, and its reservation, on which a few cattle graze and a few berries grow, contains 6,000,000 acres of valuable land. "I would recommend," writes General Sheridan, "that the Government give eighty acres to the head of each family, buy the balance from the Indians, paying them, say, half a dollar per acre, if thought proper; then purchase Government bonds with the money, and each year use for their support, through the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and their agent, the interest upon the bonds, without touching the principal. This interest would be very much more than is now appropriated yearly, and the Indians, by these means, would have a perpetual fund, the principle of which should never be touched except by acts of Congress. In fact, if all Indians and their reservations were treated in this way a better system of government for the Indians could be obtained. It would also be a good bargain for the Government, as the purchased land could be sold to actual settlers for an advance and be occupied by the people paying taxes, to say nothing of the opening up of the country."

George Hazzard, a character well known in this city, and of great State reputation, again pops to the front. His career is notable for the number of times he has been arrested, only to gain his liberty again. Hazzard was formerly a banker at Auburn, and his crooked transactions are familiar to all. He was arrested at Indianapolis August 29, last, and committed to jail at Auburn, as was then claimed, in discharge of his forfeited recognizance. At the September term of the De Kalb Circuit court he was tried on five charges, two for perjury, two for false pretense and one for forgery, and discharged on all of them. He was at once arrested on four charges pending at Angola on change of venue from De Kalb county, two for perjury, one for forgery and one for false pretense, and committed to the Steuben county jail. On Wednesday last he was discharged on these by Judge McBride, when he was again arrested on warrants issued from De Kalb county, on some old indictments which had been overlooked in the clerk's office there since 1879. Hazzard sent out a writ of habeas corpus yesterday morning, and gave bail to appear at Auburn on the 18th inst., where he says he will be promptly on time. Hazzard's health is bad; in fact, he is a walking shadow, but through all the ordeal he has kept his spirits up and maintained a wonderful courage. Hazzard has a wonderful history, made up of crooked transactions, and slips from the law's grip.

Four masked burglars entered the counting-house of the Michigan Central stock yards, New Detroit, early Sunday morning, deprived four watchmen of their footgear, locked them up in a closet, and then went up stairs and blew open a safe, finding, however, but little money or valuables. The burglars escaped, as the watchmen, after effecting their liberty, found difficulty in recovering their shoes, which the burglars had thrown outside in the snow.

In his annual report the Commissioner of Pensions recommends the remodling of the bounty land laws, and the granting of pension according to disability rather than rank. At present there are 117 grades of pensioners. The Commissioner regrets the fact that no enumeration of the pension population was made in the last census, but an approximation shows that out of 1,063,391 soldiers enlisted in the war of the rebellion, only 26 per cent have applied for pensions.

John Gray, aged twenty-two, of Jersey City, was arrested yesterday, charged with robbing his employers, J. W. Goddard & Son, silk importers in New York, of goods valued at $10,000 Gray has been leading a very fast life in Jersey City, spending money lavishly, and moving in sporting circles. A detective discovered that Gray was shipping packages to Herman Havner, a tailor, in Jersey City, and discovered a large quantity of silk trimmings in Havner's store, which were identified as the property of the Goddards. Gray's salary was $10 a week.

Jay Gould is a careful man with his money. "Outside of his family expenses," says the New York correspondent of the Philadelphia Press, "he doesn't spend $3,000 a year. He never drinks, and has no use for fast horses; he has no desire for acquaintance among fast women, no propensity for buying expensive luxuries. He lives to make money, and he has the faculty of holding on to it with the grip of a miser."

WASHINGTON.

There are indications that Congress will this session be forced to give better fast mail facilities to the West and the Southwest. A special demand, it is understood, will be made regarding the fast mails on the lines of the Baltimore and Ohio and the Chesapeake and Ohio roads. Baltimore is making a vigorous fight for this, and, if representatives of the Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois and Missouri, join in the fight, they will be pretty sure to get an improved service. Complaint is made that every thing which has been done in the line of fast mails thus far has been between Chicago and New York exclusively. The cities further south are very much inclined to join with Baltimore and make a grand kick about it. New England cities are coming to the front with complaints of a similar nature.

The Cabinet session to-day lasted two hours, and was mainly devoted to routine questions before the different departments. The question of naturalization, in connection with certain claims before the Spanish-American claims commission, was also considered. In the Jeannette court to-day, Seaman Ninderman told the story of the finding of DeLong and party, substantially the same as narrated by Melville, except he said he found five $20 gold pieces in DeLong's pocket, and turned them over to Melville.

Secretary Teller decides, in the case of the Atlantic Pacific railroad, against Forrester, who made a homestead entry within the granted limits of the company, alleging settlement three days before the company withdrew its land, that in failing to appear at the time of making final proof, the company waived the right to assert its title to the tract.

Congress has thus far justified the popular impression that the present session is to be a "business" one, and no time has thus far been wasted, and a very considerable quantity of important legislation has already been put in the way of becoming a fact. It is very evident that some sort of a civil service reform bill will be passed this session. The open assessment plan and avoid he use of large sums of money in elections are recognized by both sides as having been condemned by the people. Many Republican speak frankly of it as the great mistake which cost the party its defeat, and as frankly admit that only very vigorous work will bring the party back to a safe place by 1884.

Bills and resolutions pour in from both sides, but they are only the surface indications of a profound conviction that the time has arrived when civil service reform must form a very material feature of party ammunition, and each party is struggling to most of it. Amid all this Senator Pendleton smiles serenely as the father of the idea and as the proper living Presidential examplar from a Democratic standpoint. Civil service reform, the tariff, reduction of taxes and relief of American shipping seem likely to be the record of this session.

It is quite probable, also, that a couple of new States may be admitted, perhaps three. Washington, Dakota and New Mexico will make very vigorous efforts for admission. Already there are favorable reports upon Washington and Dakota. Their admission would give the Republicans increased strength in the Senate, where their majority is so small as to be quite a serious matter. Representative men from New Mexico are also here urging the admission of that Territory as a State, but as its politics are a little uncertain it will not, probably, be successful in its efforts.

Space in the southwestern corner of the Government reservation at Hot Springs, Arkansas, has been selected as the site for which Congress appropriated $100,000.

The House Committee on Military Affairs Tuesday, agreed to report favorably Mr. Holman's resolution calling on the Secretary of War for information concerning the operation of the act proposing to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion.

The President to-day received a telegram from Thomas H West, President of the St Louis Cotton Exchange, returning thanks for the prominent mention in his annual message respecting the Mississippi River improvement. A similar message from the President of the Memphis Cotton Exchange has also been received.

Pending the consideration of the Tariff bill by the Senate Committee on Finance, the committee will receive in manuscript or print the views of any persons who desire to submit them, but under no circumstances will they give oral hearing. Several delegations representing industries embraced in the bill are now in the city.

The Committee on Pensions to-day agreed to ask that next Tuesday be set apart by the House for the consideration of the Mexican Service Pension bill.

Secretary Folger to-day directed the Collector of Customs at the New York to "reliquidate and enter free of duty" the assignment of Sandwich Island sugar, upon which assessment was recently collected.

Jay Hubbell has been interviewed regarding Senator Ferry's charges against him, and retorts by saying that whatever Republican money was used in the campaign to defeat Republican candidates for the Legislature, was used by Ferry, of whom he contemptuously speaks as "Tom Ferry." He says Ferry has had the Senatorship so long that he hinks it is his personal property.

CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY

Dr. Dujardin-Beaumetz recommends the following mixture as useful in whooping cough, giving morning and evening a dessert or tablespoonful, according to age, in a glass of milk to which the yolk of an egg has been added: Bromide of potash, 2 grams; bromide of soda 4; bromide of ammonia, 2; water, 60; and syrup of chloral, 50 grams.

Among the inventions at a recent scientific meeting was one exhibited by Sir F. Bramwell, employed for ascertaining the velocity of trains and the efficiency of brakes. With this apparatus it was found that a train weighing 125 tons ran five miles and five yards after steam was shut off while traveling at a speed of forty-five miles an hour. The line was level and the day perfectly calm.

One of the most enormous ropes in size and length ever produced in England is that recently manufactured for service in New Zealand, where it is to be employed in hauling up ships when they run aground on the soft mud bottom there, which is occasionally the case. The rope in question is a twenty-one inch white manilla hawser, 120 fathoms long, and composed of nine strands of 315 yarns to the strand. As is well known, twelve-inch ropes are the largest size ordinarily made.

Medical men have always differed as to whether the best medical treatment of frozen persons is by gradual or rapid application of heat. "To settle the matter," says Knowledge, "Laptchinkski has made a series of very careful experiments upon dogs with the following results: Of twenty animals treated by the method of gradual resurrection in a cold room, fourteen perished; of twenty placed at once in a warm apartment, eight died; while of twenty immediately put into a hot bath, all recovered." These experiments will probably influence the practice of medical men in Russia and Northern Europe, where the question of the best means of restoring animation in persons suffering from excessive cold is of frequent occurrence every winter.

His 20 years' observations of the hourly rainfalls made at Prague by Dr F. Augustin, compared with the rain measurements conducted at Modena, Bern, Vienna and Zechen lead him to the conclusion that in the quantity of the downfall as well as its frequency there are these daily maxima and minima. The first minimum as regards frequency is from midnight to 1 a. m., but as regards to quality from two to three a. m. This in all the stations, except Bern, is the most decided minimum, both for quantity and frequency. The first maximum coincides with or follows shortly after the minimum daily temperature. As regards frequency, it occurs from six to seven a. m., but as regards quantity from seven to eight a m. The second minimum, both as to quantity and frequency, is about noon. The second maximum daily temperature, or from about four to five p. m. The third maximum is in frequency from eight to nine, and in quantity from nine to ten p. m.

Mr. H. W. S. Cleveland, in his important pamphlet on "The Culture and Management of Our Native Forests," says that we must learn to imitate nature in our methods of cultivation, if we would grow forests successfully. The primary point is to keep the trunks of the trees shaded. Nature does this by massing the plants closely together in the forests, so that they shade each other, or by giving a wide spread of limbs with low heads to trees in the open. It also protects the cambium layer with thick deposits of old bark, and we endanger the health of the tree when we scrape this off. Another important point is to keep the roots well mulched, as nature does with old leaves, thick mold and mosses in the forest; and a third point is to protect the trees well from the southwest wind—the breeze which, with its drying heat, is the most damaging to the vitality of the tree. In illustration of the vitality of this rule Mr. Cleveland points to the greater luxuriance and variety of plant life on the east side of seas and lakes on the west side.

A True Romance At Dayton.

Cincinnati Gazette.

"Cornelius V. Cain, vagrancy," was the registry on the docket of the Dayton police court a few days ago, and with this brief line there is connected a story of stranger adventures than one man often experiences. Thirty years ago Cain, then a mere boy, ran off to sea on a French merchantman. The ship was taken by pirates after a stout resistance, and every one on board except young Cain walked the plank, he being spared by an old Spaniard on account of his youth. After seeing all his companions disappear, the boy sadly but still gratefully, followed his savior, the old Spaniard. He was with these men for years, visiting Peru, Mexico, Brazil and many other countries of Central and South America, at one time joining cattle ranchers on the plains. Connections, of course, split up the ship's crew, and sickness played sad havoc with them. For eight years Cain lived as a cattle herder, when his roving disposition again asserted itself, and five years of seafaring followed. He was wrecked off the Bermudas, picked up by an English man-of-war, and taken to Liverpool. Several years were spent in travel through the Grecian isles and into Asia with English merchants. Then followed a trip to the South Sea islands and several narrow escapes from shipwrecks. Some time was spent in mining in California, all, however, spent in a fruitless search for a brother. Another year was spent herding cattle in Texas, and at last Cain determined to come East and seek his father. Traveling mostly on foot, he reached Ohio entirely destitute, and has wound up in the Dayton work-house as a vagrant. But the most wonderful part of the story is that his father, entirely unknown to him, is an inmate of the Soldier's Home. After thirty years it now seems they are to meet again and it will doubtless be a sight worthy of a painter's brush—the meeting of a runaway boy, now a bearded and bronzed man, and the stern parent, once a prosperous manufacturer, now an old and infirm soldier.

The Hon. Lionel Sackville West, British Minister to the United States at Washington, went to Maryland to fish in the placid waters of that State. He caught a few fish, and was in turn caught and arrested by an unsympathetic officer for violating the fish laws of the State. He was, however, immediately released by order of the State Department.

You was once a girl yourself.

Here is a mesmeric tale that comes from Oregon: A woman named Furnes, a professional clairvoyant, became enamored of a young banker at Portland, and mesmerised him at one of her sittings. This done, she joined hands with him, and they were married by a minister present, whom she mesmerized for the purpose.

Three Mourn for One.

Washington Letter to Hartford Times.

In one of the rooms of the Census Office are two young ladies. Both are dressed in mourning. One of them has been in the Census Office for some time, the other was recently transferred there from the Land office. They were both engaged to the same young man who was a clerk in the Census Office. He died some weeks since. One did not know that he was engaged to the other until a few days since. In one of the rooms of the patent office a young lady grieves over the loss of her lover. The lover was the same young man. How he would have managed if he had lived no one knows. The two ladies in the Census Office look daggers at each other —when they look at each other at all.

The Speakership.

To show the favorable reception that Mr. Moody's candidacy for the speakership has received all through the state, we clip a few of the comments we find among our exchanges. It will be seen that all, without exception concede the justice of the claim the north part of the state should receive some such recognition as this. The Plymouth Democrat of Nov. 30 has the following:

"Hon. D. D. Moody, of DeKalb county, is announced as a candidate for speaker of the house of representatives. Mr. Moody is a rising young man, and having served in two sessions of the general assembly with a considerable degree of credit to himself, it may with reason be conjectured that, if elected, he would make an acceptable presiding officer."

And in the Goshen Democrat of Nov. 29, is the following hearty tribute to Mr. Moody's ability, as a plea for the justice of his claims:

"Hon. D. D. Moody, of DeKalb county, is mentioned as a candidate for speaker of the next house of representatives. From all that we know of Mr. Moody we should say that the selection would be an excellent one. His record of the last house is A No. 1. and his qualifications for the position are pronounced first-class. It seems to be difficult for any one living as far north as DeKalb county to secure any favors at the capital, but we hope Mr. Moody may prove an exception to the rule. At all events we bespeak for him the active support of all democratic members from this end of the state."

We find the following in a recent number of the Corunna Headlight:

"Hon. D. D. Moody, representative-elect from DeKalb, has been favorably mentioned by the democratic press in connection with the speakership of the next house. Mr. Moody is a rising young statesman of budding genius, and a democratic stalwart to the backbone. He has already made a shinning mark on the floor of the general assembly, and if chosen to preside over the deliberation of that body he will prove himself a Roman of the line. As DeKalb county is very modest in her aspirations respecting a recognition of native talent, we trust that the claims of our representative will receive due consideration.

The Ligonier Banner speaks its mind as follows:

"The candididacy of Hon. D. D. Moody for the speakership of the Indiana house of representatives is generally endorsed by the democratic press of Northern Indiana. Mr. Moody made a gallant race for re-election and achieved what, under all the circumstances, may justly be regarded a brilliant victory. As a representative of the young democracy he occupies not only a prominent but also a proud position on the floor, his services in the house will fully attest the wisdom of his constituency in honoring him with a second term."

The Fort Wayne Daily of the same date as the above, also adds its opinion, and gives Mr. Moody's candidacy a boom from Allen county:

"For speaker of the next house of representatives D. D. Moody, of DeKalb county, is prominently mentioned. Mr. Moody is one of the most earnest, active and industrious men in the state and did excellent service for the part in the late campaign. He is a quick, read man well posted in parlimentary circles, finely educated, a good speaker, has a fine address, and would be an honor to the state if the house should elect him as its next presiding officer."

To these, we might add several weighty arguments found in recent numbers of the Indianapolis Sentinel and other leading papers. Mr. Moody's locality situated as he is, in a part of the state that has never received the speakership, and in fact but little or anything else in this line, gives his claims a strength, while his past experience in legislative duties render him one of the best fitted for the position, of all the members who will assemble there this winter.

THE Press last week asks: "We wonder if the school house janitors think that puff in the Courier paid them for their work at the township institute." As Waterloo is the only place at which the county superintendent has ever been called upon to pay for such services at examinations and institutes, and as the editor of the Press is the only trustee in the state that would think of making such a charge, the omission to call on the janitors and settle, was a very natural one. However, as the bill has now been paid, we hope the editor of the Press will realize how prominently such a transaction will bring him before the public, and be happy accordingly.

Major Samuel W. Sprott.

Major Samuel Woodburn Sprott is dead. He died at his residence in Auburn on Thursday December 14, 1882, aged 78 years, six mos. and 12 days, having been confined to his house only twenty-four hours, although he had for a number of years been in feeble health.

The subject of this sketch was born in Darlington, Beaver County, Pennsylvania, May 1, 1804, in which county he resided until after his majority, teaching school and acting as prothonotary (county clerk) of his native county, and after a spirited contest for the same office in which he was defeated by a brother, he sought his fortunes in the then west, settling in Ashland County, O., where he continued to reside until he made DeKalb County his home. He first visited our county in July 1840, made some purchases of real estate, returned to this county to make it his permanent place of residence. At that time there were but twelve families residing in this (Union) township and probably not more than a section of land cleared within its boundaries. The roads were not opened, there being only trails and paths through the woods, marked by the frontiersman's ax-blazes upon the trees. There were no bridges nor culverts, no frame or brick houses, no orchards, no school or public buildings. At that time not a railroad was constructed in either Ohio or Indiana and but few canals. Western Ohio and Northern Indiana was then almost one vast wilderness.

Shortly after his arrival here he was, by the Judge of the DeKalb Circuit Court, appointed County Clerk, and by virtue of which appointment he also became County Auditor and County Recorder. He acted as County Auditor about two years, but continued to hold the other two offices until the fall of 1851. In 1855 he was again elected Clerk for a term of four years, since which he has acted as deputy clerk nearly or quite one-half of the time.

In his youth he became a member of the Presbyterian church, of which he continued a member until his death. Although not as zealous and forward in the workings and duties of the church as some, he was a faithful believer in its teachings, and in his conditions of life exemplified the great moral tenets of that and other christian denominations. His hand and purse was ever ready and willing to aid and support the churches, Sunday and week-day schools, as well as any and all public or private charities and enterprises. Scarcely a church or school house was built in the early settlement of our county, without receiving his aid and encouragement. Nor has there lived in our county since his residence in it, a poor family or person who has not received and been benefitted from his charitable hand if their wants were made known, and oftentimes unasked and unsolicited. Indeed, he was the poor man's friend and doubtless there are hundreds now who greatfully remember his kindness and bless his memory. The history of DeKalb County cannot be written without portraying the life and character of Major Sprott. In everything calculated to benefit the people he stood in the foremost ranks and with his cousel, his time and his means encouraged and endeavored to obtain. In the building of the railroads within our county he contributed thousands of dollars, and never received in return the value of a penny. It was because of this great liberality in public enterprises, together with his private charities, he in his old days became involved, and died almost a pennyless man.

In politics he was known of all men who ever became acquainted with him. Not a voter in the county need be told to which of the political parties our dear friend belonged. His belief in the doctrines of the fathers of the democratic party—of Jefferson and Jackson—was as unfaltering and unwavering as the magnetic needle in pointing to the polar star. He took as the fundamental principle upon which all political action in our government should be based that all power emanated from the people, that they were the source of all power, that all powers granted to the government and officials, should be strictly construed with a zealous watchfulness lest the government should encroach upon the rights of the people. Anything like centralization or aggrandizement of power upon the part of the government, he looked upon as despotic and monarchical. In fact anything suggested not fully in accord with the views of the early fathers of his party he believed were most pernicious to and would eventually be subversive of our form of government. The views of the Federalists, Whigs, and the Republican party of to-day, he believed to be only other terms for centralization, monarchy and one-man power. He really thought no good could come of a party whose principles were based upon theories antagonistic to his ideas of the genius of our government. With such faith in the principles of his party, and such views of the opposing political parties it was no wonder that his expressions and actions were pronounced full of warmth and earnestness. In political matters he was always in earnest and even up to the day of his death took deep interest in the political affairs of the day.

He was a great reader and student of the history of his country and its public men, and in his time equally as great a worker. As a writer and speaker he was not as smooth and eloquent as some, but his matter was always well selected and digested, and withal it was invariably backed up with the strongest of argument and statement of facts. He always considered it a duty, which he performed, to attend the state and national conventions of his party and since his residence in our state was a co-laborer with and admirer of such men as Govs. Whitcomb, Wright, Willard and Hendricks, and of McDonald, Voorhees, the Colericks, the Edgertons and the Dawsons with whom his relations were most friendly and intimate.

Although he may at times have been considered a bitter partisan, and received his full share of censure from his political opponents no man ever said or can say, that Major Sprott was a dishonest man, or did a dishonest act. He may have committed errors and had his faults, but he never with his great, warm charitable heart purposely injured a human being.

The subject of our article was twice married Nov. 20, 1845, he married Harriet Eunice Miller, of this county, who died June 12, 1847, and June, 1848, he married Sarah J. Hays, of Ashland County, Ohio, who died August 5, 1880, and who was the mother of his only surviving son and daughter.

His funeral was held at the Presbyterian church in this place last Saturday, the pastor McCord officiating, and notwithstanding the inclement weather a very large concourse of the old citizens of our town and county attended to pay their respects to the remains of their old friend who they had known and honored so long.

But our old and esteemed friend is gone. His was a long and worthy life. He did his part well, freely and cheerfully. He did more than the part usually allotted to man, and the world is the better because of his living in it. His time had come, his life's work was ended and he was ready and prepared to go. And without a regret, without a wish to longer live but with a cheering hope and unbounded faith in the truths of the christian religion he laid himself down and without a struggle passed from the shores of time to a life of immortality.

Let everybody call on us and see for themselves how cheap they can buy. 51-2t.

A Good Foundation.

In American households the prevailing complaints are weakness of the stomach and its consequences, indigestion, nervousness and rheumatism. Such sufferers can lay a good foundation for health by using Parker's Ginger Tonic as it tones up the stomach and nerves, and keeps the kidneys active to carry off their foul matter.—N. O. Picayune. 49-4t

ABRIGHT'S PARADISE OF

Auburn Courier.

Local and Miscellaneous.

—Its all holidays.

—Court is in session this week.

—Get ready for the funeral of 1882.

—The theater company had an "orchestra."

—Read the advertisements closely and be wise.

—Buck Allen turns out the best rigs in the county.

—Calico balls (bawls) are all the go in towns around us.

—Our ice men are talking of soon beginning to pack the stuff.

—Rochester, Indiana, is to have a third newspaper. Too many.

—Shooting matches in the turkey interest are quite popular now.

—The boys who were missed at Sunday-school were after the rabbit.

—The Journal office at Fort Wayne has been sold to parties from Cincinnati.

—D. Y. Husselman, esq., has moved his law office in with the county surveyor.

—Every little boy who can follow a track is out hunting the meek-eyed rabbit.

—The show company claim that they left more money in the town than they took out.

—The Swineford House refuses to keep show companies under any circumstances.

—Twenty drunken men on Seventh street Tuesday. Getting ready to swear off; d'ye see.

—Parties are gathering together turkeys, geese and ducks for holiday raffling matches.

—We hear that many of our citizens go to Fort Wayne to do their trading. That's wrong.

—A band of body snatchers are located at Ft. Wayne. That town has lots of trouble.

—A series of protracted meetings are in progress at the new church in Jackson township.

—Edward Baker is now the father of a bran new girl. It made its arrival one day last week.

—Jack Ralston has sold his delivery horse. He don't want any run-a-way nags in his "plate."

—Frank Benedict has purchased Era County, Ohio, for the right to sell the searight damper.

—There was just enough snow fall each day last week to keep the sleighing in good condition.

—The cuts that appear in the Courier next week can be used by any of our advertisers in the future.

—Ex-County Treasurer Daniel Gonser was married last week to a Mrs. Bair, of Fairfield township.

—The new bridge over Cedar Creek is quite a convenience and the farmers from the east praise it highly.

—A shabby genteel was kicking Saturday night about some one taking his scarf from the seat of a cutter.

—The Columbia City Post is making a grand effort to secure a new court-house. They need it bad enough.

—The teachers of Jackson township held an institute Saturday. All were present but one and did good work.

—It was a common thing last week to see a fellow throw up his heels and sit down on the cold, cold, "beautiful."

—Every one who owned a sleigh or could borrow, stand off a liveryman or crowd between somebody was out Sunday.

—Racing is freely indulged in on Main street. Somebody will get smashed wide open before the sleighing goes.

—The "Jolly Seven" gave a dance at Ensley's Hall last Thursday evening. They had a large crowd and a good time.

—A sleighing party from here went to Waterloo, Tuesday evening, and were guests at the residence of ex-sheriff Leas.

—Henry Mossy has purchased a lot on South Cedar St. and will erect a small brick residence in the spring.

—Jim. Rhodenbaugh and Neal Veeley had a little sparing match Monday evening. Jim. carries the marks of the battle.

—Jimmy Baxter drives one of the fastest horses in the place, and he handles the lines with the skill of a jockey.

—But few of the boys went down from the theater to get a "clove." They were too much interested in the performance.

—Grave yard insurance agents are working the town. Johnny Canon took a deal in this line and we suppose made a "fortune."

—White's theater troupe played here five nights and had fair audiences at each entertainment. The company is deserving of public patronage.

—We hear that our long-haired friend Dr. LaRue, experienced religion at the Methodist church one evening last week. That's a sure cure, doctor.

—No news has reached the Courier yet as to whether or not any of our Sunday-schools will give a concert or have a Christmas tree during the holidays.

—Our wood subscribers have been renewing old promises nobly for a few days past. Let the good work go on, gentlemen, as we have room for many more cords.

—Jack Brown and the coon who was with White's theater, came near having a little shoulder exercise last Saturday. Mr. "Black" had better steer clear of Mr. Brown.

—The annual hop that has been the custom at the Junction for some time in the past will enjoy the occasion again December 21. The Courier wishes them a happy evening.

—Jeff. Myers, at one time a workman in the Courier office, was sentenced to ninety days at Ft. Wayne for stealing. Jeff. spends the most of his time in penitentiaries and county bastiles.

—Fort Wayne police are making a raid on gambling dens in that city, and the papers state that many of the "poker dots" are compelled to borrow boodle in order to leave the town.

—The new board of commissioners and auditor left a good impression upon those who transacted business with them at their first meeting. They took to their new duties with apparent ease and business knowledge.

—J. C. Henry has a new invention in the sleigh line. It is rigged up in skeleton style with a buggy top on, and the outfit affords as much amusement for the youngster as a witty clown in a double-tented circus.

—An ugly fight occurred Tuesday afternoon between Thomas Summers and George Grund wherein the latter was badly used up. We are not informed what orignated the quarrel but the facts will come out in the future.

—A. M. Harkey, of New Era, while taking out his best girl for a sleigh ride last week, had the misfortune to lose his bells, so report has it, and it is said he did not find them till he got home We think friend Harkey ought to rise up and explain.

—The winter thus far has been solid, and should in continue so throughout the season we can look forward for a good run of business. The saw mills and factories carry a full force and the laborers can find employment enough to keep them busy.

—A hard looking seed, full to the chin with the stuff that sparkles and causes a man to imagine he is walking on a rail fence, was enquiring of every one he met Saturday evening where Junction town was. He gave his name as Michael Bohler.

—Straw, the organ man, has put his "wagon" on runners, and when the boys try to go 'round 'im they must remember and give him plenty of road or they are liable to get strung on the axeltrees that point out on either side like a prairie compass.

—Saturday evening there were three helpless drunken men between Seventh and Ninth streets on Main. We think it's about time for our authorities to salary a marshal so that that officer will have an object in looking after the interests of the town.

—We wish to impress upon the minds of our business men that they should send in advertisements and local notices by Tuesday evening. The Courier goes to press Wednesday noon, as a general occurrence, and to insure their insertion we must have them at the above time.

—George Himbrecht, a Fort Wayne policeman, has brought suit against the Daily News for $5,000. He arrested one of the staff for disorderly conduct, and the pencil pusher was acquitted. The News then made charges of inefficiency, perjury, etc., against the officer; hence the suit.

—Those who "shake the fantastic toe" can hop on to following dates for next week: Next Wednesday evening the Jolly Seven dance, Thursday the Joie De Vie and Riley Zimmerman's club, and Friday the Old Netoric. This is not very encouraging for the protracted meeting season.

—Next week we will illustrate the Courier somewhat, more for the benefit and amusement of our young readers than anyone else. There are a large number of little ones who read our paper and for them we have gone to extra trouble and expense to get funny pictures for them to laugh at.

—W. E. English, recent candidate for congress, was the defendent in a bastardy case at Indianapolis last week. Elizabeth Williams, a widow, brought the complaint against him, and English and his friends claim it was a blackmailing scheme. They compromised.

—The Courier issued over thirteen hundred papers last week and we were short about twenty-five copies to complete our mails. We also had calls for thirty or forty extras from parties who are not regular subscribers, being a fair acknowledgement that the paper takes well among the greater number of our people.

—F. Buchanan and C. H. Brown are blossoming out into full fledged organ agents. If you want an organ call on them.

—The farmer gets $1.50 for a cord of wood. He pays forty cents for having it cut, fifty for drawing it to town and ten cents for the timber, leaving him a clear profit of sixty cents. Yet with all these great and grand advantages many of them squeal.

—The annual meeting for the election of trustees of Union Lodge No. 1436 of Knights of Honor will be held in their hall at Waterloo, on the evening of the last Friday in December, 1882,

S. B. JOHNSON, Reporter.
W. H. LEAS, Director.

—Fin. Gibson has a novel sign, especially for the severe cold weather we have been having for two weeks past. On one side it reads, "Fresh Oysters," but there is nothing very striking 'bout that. On the other it says, "Ice Cream," causing the half-frozen pedestrain to reflect on the balmy days of July while shivering like a dog on a curb stone.

—It is rumored upon the streets that Samuel Grush, one of the proprietors of the south end grist mill, has gone insane. He entered the pulpit of the M. E. church Sunday evening and said to the officiating minister. "Stand to one side, I'll do this talking myself," and began to lay off law and religion at a fearful rate.

—The ladies are not to be outwitted; no, sir. The "Owl Club" has been matched, and the mothers and daughters have organized a society called the "Taine Club," which has met every week for about eight months. They propose to give a parlor entertainment soon. The society met at Dr. Ford's residence last Saturday afternoon.

—Christian Fell and Thomas Hallum have formed a partnership and their shingle reads: "Fell and Hallum's city bill posters, office in second story of Huston's building, corner Main and Seventh streets." Their first contract was putting up the paper for Humpty Dumpty and being a little on the sauercraut order they got tangled somewhat and made the posters read, "Hupty Dupty." We look for a cyclone to come against this firm shortly.

—Our citizens generally agree that the White company are all talented in their profession. If troupes of equal experience would visit us oftener our people would soon appreciate and patronize such companies that are worthy of consideration. Auburn should have a good opera house and our citizens take an interest in entertainments that tend to cultivate and advance the dramatic part of our curiosity.

—Dr. Solomon Stough, who has been confined in the jail here on the charge of issuing incorrect certificates in pension matters, was pardoned last week. He received his pardon Saturday night and immediately left for his home in Waterloo. During the time he has been here it was found necessary to give him considerable freedom, as his confinement was telling severely on his health. By his consistent and honorable course in this matter the docter has made many friends.

—The rural poet has struck the Columbia City Herald which no doubt has been the cause of so much snow falling last week. See how the pencil pusher starts out:

> "Come crystal snow, to the earth below
> And bury the leaflets brown,
> And cover the bed of the dreamless dead
> With thy robe as soft as down."

—On Saturday evening last the First Presbyterian church of Fort Wayne, was burned and nothing now remains of the edifice but the gloomy and blackened walls. The church was erected thirty-seven years ago and was a prominent land mark of that city. The sexton, a venerable old gentleman, neglected his duties and hence the conflagation.

—Next week volume twelve of the Courier closes, and during that long period of time the paper has prospered beyond the expectations of its different managers, and especially so under the present ownership. It has stood by the rights of our citizens, always had a good word for the town, lending its aid and influence to the building up of the place and to increase the growth and prosperity of the citizens and village. The business men have shown their liberality and enterprise very well for a town of this size, and we feel grateful to them and acknowledge their generosity with the kindest wishes for all and a happy, prosperous career through the new year now dawning. Owing to the fact that a town is always judged by the advertisements in a newspaper we urge our patrons and friends to increase their patronage to what they think is legitimate and will bring an equivalent for the money used. The Courier is the leading paper in Auburn and in the county, and we shall always strive for everything that tends to keep it where it now is. While we do our part let the business men do theirs also. We wish all of our subscribers and readers a merry Christmas and a happy New Year, with the best of luck and good fortune to follow them until 1884 makes its bow to us.

—The Union Soldiers Ass'n., of Auburn, will have a grand social on Saturday evening Dec. 30. All members are requested to meet at their hall next Saturday night to make necessary arrangements. C. ECKHART, Sec'y.

—Abright has everything arranged for the rush.

People and Their Doings.

Tom. Scott is again an Auburnite.

Jep. Orr, Corunna, was in town Monday.

Henry Shoemaker has gone back to Waterloo.

Charley Pommert has been complaining for several weeks.

Mrs. D. B. Harris, nee Rainier, of Chicago, is visiting in town.

Miss Ella Niles, of Albion, has been visiting her sister in this place.

Edward Orr and family, of Corunna, will visit in this place to-morrow.

Simon Snyder and wife, of Angola, were guests at D. D. Snyder's Sunday.

Mrs. Dr. Spooner, of Perue, Ind., is visiting her parents Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Ford, this week.

Rev. McCord and lady were entertained at the farm residence of C. A. Mead Tuesday afternoon.

Mrs. J. A. Cowan and her daughter Annis tripped to Fort Wayne, via of the Air Line, last Saturday.

Medical student Snyder, accompanied by a Seventh street belle, noded to the Waterloo folks Tuesday evening.

Charley Dugan was taken suddenly ill Monday afternoon and another teacher was installed in his place.

Calvin Husselman and family were guests at Clerk Husselman's Sunday.

Mrs. Chas. McDonald fell while going to the pump for a bucket of water, last week, and bruised her hip quite badly.

J. J. Walter, of Albion, is home for a while. He is staying with his father in Jackson township, who has been in ill health for some time.

Constable Gangler, of Garrett, who was shot in the face and "neck" by a saloon man while out hunting recently, was in town Friday last.

We took Johnny Robbins, by the hand Saturday and gave him the usual "How does it go, old boy?" He has been away for a—week.

William Ryan, general superintendent of the daubing gang on the B. & O., was flying about town in a two-dollar-and-a-half cutter Sunday.

Mrs. T. Y. Dickinson and daughter Hattie, of Waterloo, spent Sunday and Monday visiting the editors family and calling on numerous friends in town.

Bab. Lewis, the good natured lumber man, called on the Courier last week. This was his first visit, and now as we have become "acquainted' we look for him often.

W. B. Adams, the leading hardware merchant of Corunna, called on us Monday. It was an awful cold day but William is one of those fellows who always pay their subscription in advance cold or warm—hence his appearance and exit.

J. C. Loveland, esq., the spicy editor of the Head Light, dropped into the Courier office Tuesday like a grim spectre and caused the devil to pi a stick of solid nonparel. Now, as we have "kissed and made up" we say to Joseph, in language soft and clear, come, come again.

We return thanks for even a brief call from our young legal friend T. R. Marshal, of Columbia City, a pleasant surprise that happened last week. The people of Columbia all speak highly of his ability as a lawyer and we are glad to find that he stands high among members of his profession.

—There will be a congressional meeting at St. Johns church, Hudson, Ind., Dec. 29, 1882, for the purpose of electing four trustees.

—We have not seen as yet any comments from republican papers upon the subject of, "Read Them Together!" Patiently we wait.

—The Wabash road will sell tickets to any point along the line during the holidays at one and one-third regular rates for the round trip.

—Ferguson & Smith will locate a marble shop in this place soon. They propose dealing and working in granite and marble monuments of all kinds.

—There has been nothing of any importance transacted at court up to-day, most of the time being occupied in arranging and getting for "earnest" labor.

—J. L. Davis, esq., has his horse so that it is safe to drive again. Careless handling of the lines is what spoiled the animal in the first place and great caution should now be taken—drive slow and whip light.

—About twenty persons met at the residence of Captain Silvers last Saturday evening to surprise George Park, it being his 33d birthday. By the laughing and merriment kept up we should judge they had a very pleasant time.

—The Presbyterian Sunday-school will give the little ones a christmas sleigh ride to Waterloo, Monday. They will meet there in Agricultural Hall and have a winter picnic of apples, popcorn, candy, etc. They will return at an early hour, so the children will not be out too late. A pleasant time is anticipated.

—EDITOR COURIER:—In reply to your inquiry of last week, there is an organization in our place, known as the Owl Club. Have their charter &c., and for particulars enquire of W. H. McIntyre, president and W. H. McQuiston secretary and vice president.

THE LITTLE BOY WHO SOAPED

A little boy went out to swim,
And took a cake of soap with him,
And slimed each supple little limb.

And when he on the bank arove,
One long, last downward look he gove,
And then into the water dove.

And trying to regain the top,
In vain, alas! he tried to flop—
He went so fast he couldn't stop!

His limbs were soaped from heel to hip—
He couldn't get a half-way grip—
For every time he tried he'd slip.

The water no resistance gave,
And so beneath the murky wave
He found a wet, untimely grave.

With thrilling, thundering, thumping thud,
He struck the misty, moisty mud—
And turkies fattened on his blood.

We dedicate this little hymn
To little boys of supple limb
Who soap themselves before they swim.
—Denver Tribune.

SANTWOOD

BY CLYDE RAYMOND

"Yes I have decided to remain away two years. That will be none too long in which to forget this wretched affair and accustom myself to some of the stern realities of life. I find that fate has not decreed my pathway to be one of roses.

The speaker was reclining carelessly upon a luxurious sofa, amid such elegant surroundings that one might naturally wonder what there could be in his experience to tincture his thoughts of the future with so much gloom.

A fine-looking man of middle age, seated near him, was the person with whom he was ostensibly conversing, though a girl sitting at the piano a little farther off felt that the vein of bitterness underlying the words was meant especially for her.

Her hands were wandering half idly over the keys, playing in softest,sweetest fashion that rythmical,half mournful air, "Upon the Danube River." Deep, rich bass chords dropped now and then into the low-dripping, silvery melody, and the player hummed, as if to her own thoughts,in low, sympathetic tone, the refrain:

"I'll ne'r forget that night in June
Upon the Danube river."

She, at least, did not wonder why the speaker looked upon the dark side of life then, for she knew. She knew what all the world did, that the proud name of Santwood had been dragged in the dust by a brother's crime. Forgery and suicide had furnished the greedy press with sensational columns and blazing head-lines, whose every glaring, significant letter cut into the sensitive heart of Philip like a two-edged sword

But the listener at the piano knew that a sharper pain than even that dictated the hopeless words She remembered a scene in the library but a few hours past, when he had told her of his resolve to leave his native land and, in the weakness of the moment, had broken down and confessed the love which he had meant, now since disgrace had overtaken him, to keep a secret to the end. For what right had he, he bitterly asked himself, to offer his stained name for any woman's acceptance?

But it is true that "murder will out," so will love when when it is thrilling in every nerve, when every hope and interest in life is indentified with its dear object.

"Yet I am not sorry that you know it, after all," he had said. "Little fitted as I am now to offer my love to one so pure and proud as you, it would have been hard for me to have borne this hopeless love in silence. A week ago I could have told you all this without one thrill of shame or self reproach. But then, not dreaming of my coming trouble, I was content to wait until you had seen the world and learned your own heart thoroughly. What your answer might have been then I do not know, but at least I should have felt myself the peer of any other who might sue for the honor of your hand; while now——"

He broke off abruptly with a heavy, sharp-drawn breath, and paced the floor with the air of some proud caged animal chafing bitterly against the bars that held him.

Suddenly he paused before her as she stood, white and silent, leaning against the mantel for support, and, taking her hand in both of his, said, with passionate pleading:

"But, after all, it is not my sin, Marguerite. You are proud, I know; but will you turn from me for my brother's fault? If you can love me, ever so little, will you not tell me so, and let me take that knowledge with me to comfort me in my long exile? I will wait—wait until this trouble has been forgotten; until I can do something to redeem——"

"Do not ask me," she interrupted, shudderingly; and then she turned, and, looking straight into his anguished, despairing eyes, in a voice that sounded cold and harsh in her efforts to repress all feeling, she said: "Philip Santwood, you spoke truly just now. I am proud—too proud, perhaps; but a stainless name is everything to me. I am poor myself, but my name is without blot or blemish, and, while I am sorry for you, I cannot——"

But her voice died away in silence. To save her life she could not have put the sentence which she was about to speak into words, with those sternly compressed lips and those dry, yearning eyes before her.

"At least tell me," he pleaded huskily, "could you have loved me had it not been for—this?"

"I cannot tell what might have been," she answered, turning wearily away. "I only know what is. This is a painful subject, Mr. Santwood. Let it end, please."

She meant to be gentle in manner and speech. But the great struggle it cost her to speak calmly seemed to crystalize both into the hardness of marble, and when she turned away Philip read only pride—nothing but pride and coldness—in her voice and in the pale, set features. He saw nothing of the aching heart behind that mask.

So, as she sat there with the low, sweet music dropping from the keys, not a word or sigh of Philip Santwood's escaped her; not the least sight or sound of that unhappy evening but impressed itself upon her memory, and months afterward came back to her mingled always with the sad, sweet measure of that song.

The next day he was gone. Marguerite was conscious of a terrible loneliness, a bitter loss, when the fine, manly figure had disappeared entirely from her view; when the fair, proud head and the handsome face which, until the past week, had been so full of sunny happiness had gone forever from her home. She might have brought back the brightness to it with only the one word "hope," yet she could not bring herself to speak it.

She was proud, far too proud—this beautiful girl—of her stainless old family name with which no shade of disgrace was ever blent.

As the months wore on Marguerite realized to the full the bitterness of a hopeless love. They heard from Philip—that is, her guardian did, and he was accustomed to repeat the contents of those letters to her, occasionally reading one aloud to her throughout. She never asked to see them herself, though often her heart ached for a sight of the words that his hand had traced.

After a time the letters began to breathe a spirit of content, then a woman's name crept into them, and then it was not long ere Col. Tracy informed his ward that Philip was married.

It was a terrible blow to Marguerite, whose love for the bright, handsome fellow was only less strong and intense than her indomitable pride. She could have recalled him, but she would not, though her heart longed continually for his presence. Now it seemed he had found some one—a truer woman than herself, it must be—who loved him and scorned to sacrifice her happiness and his for his brother's crime.

But it was too late now to think of what might have been, so she kept on in her round of social gayeties, trying to hide her remorse and regret under a prouder bearing, a more brilliantly-smiling face than of old.

And now she learned something which she had never before suspected. Col. Tracy loved her, and laid heart and fortune at her feet with all the passionate ardor of a young man. Marguerite was utterly surprised. She had no love for him, and so refused him as gently as she could.

But the love of the middle-aged man of the world was not to be dismissed as easily as the youth whose pride forbade him to ask twice.

She did not love him, but she entertained a respectful affection for him, added to which was the knowledge as flattering to her pride that, out of the whole world full of fair women, he, the handsome,cultured man of society, should have chosen her. At length she said to him with simple frankness:

"Dear guardy if you are willing to take me, knowing now I have loved Philip Santwood; knowing that, if it were not a sin now, I would always love him, you may do so, and I will endeavor to the utmost to be a true and affectionate wife."

So Marguerite Compton found herself Mrs. Col. Tracy, a petted leader of fashion, the possessor of a haughty name, and the idol of a fond husband's heart. Yet now, when it was too late, she knew that could she but share Philip Santwood's young, clouded life and wear that stained, rejected name of his, she would be a far happier woman.

It was in the second year of her marriage that she and her husband made the tour of Europe. They had visited many of the principal cities; Mrs. Tracy had been presented at court, and was as much admired as her proud and devoted husband could desire; and now they were sailing down the Danube.

They had passed many picturesque villages and ancient ruins on the shores of that grand and storied river, and were nearing Linz, celebrated for the lovliness of its situation and the beauty of its women, when Marguerite sat on the deck of the steamer, apart from all others, thinking sadly of that evening in her life when she had decided her fate against her own happiness. How vividly the words of the song came back to her, as she leaned over the railing, and looked down at the greenish-blue waters below:

"I'll ne'er forget that night in June
Upon the Danube river."

How strange that this should be a moonlit night in June, and that she herself should be "upon the Danube river!"

While her whole mind and heart were back upon that never-to-be-forgotten evening, a dark shadow came between her and the moonlight. She glanced up involuntarily, and her heart almost ceased its throbbing. There before her stood the hero of her thought—Philip Santwood — looking down upon her. One thing she had time to notice as he came toward her—his proud, fair face looking almost stern in the moonlight—the old-fashioned love was in his eyes.

One instant her heart thrilled wildly as she saw it; then, as he came nearer, there was a terrible noise, an awful shock; then flames were issuing from the steamer, and men, and children were struggling for their lives in the waters of the Danube.

When Mrs. Tracy opened her eyes after the stunning jar of the expolsion, she found herself clasped in the arms of Philip Santwood, who was making heroic efforts to save her.

"Oh, Philip," she cried, with her first breath, "where is my husband? And your wife, too? We must not forget them!"

"My wife!" She saw the astonishment in his eyes even in that dreadful moment. "I never had a wife, Marguerite. Did he tell you so?"

"Yes," she answered.

And then, as the treachery of her husband a scheme to win her love from Philip flashed like lightning into her mind, she regretted with all the loyality of a true, if not loving wife, that she had betrayed it to his rival.

"Save him—oh, save him first, Philip!" she pleaded, anxiously

"You are a woman, Marguerite—the woman I love," he replied, a half savage joy thrilling in his tones. "It is my duty and my pleasure to aid you. He is a man, and my enemy. I am under no obligation to him. Let him take care of himself."

For one instant Marguerite lay with closed eyes in Philip's arms, thinking almost that she was in heaven. He had never married another; he loved her madly yet, and she—ah, heaven! how she had loved him! This was a night of danger. If anything should happen that would set her free——

She checked herself then. What a wicked—what a horrible thought! Just then her husband floated past them, clinging with white, desparing face to a portion of the wreck. He seemed exhausted and about sink.

"Oh, save him!" she cried again, in agony at her own wickedness.

Philip's face appalled her. Upon it was pictured the fearful struggle going on in his soul—love, jealousy, hatred, indecision.

"I cannot save you both," he said, hoarsely.

"Then him first," said Marguerite, with desperate passion in her voice. "Oh, Philip, if I am lost it will not be through any sin of yours, but if you leave him purposely to die unaided, it will be—murder."

Philip's face seemed to grow even whiter as she breathed that last word with terrible distinctness.

"I see," he said quietly. "I will do what I can."

Perhaps he might now atone for his brother's crime, was the new thought which stirred his soul to its depths.

Marguerite, clinging to the tiny raft where Philip had left her (it was scarcely large enough to hold two persons,) saw her husband snatched almost from the jaws of death by the man whom they had both so mercilessly wronged, with a feeling of intense thankfulness to heaven too deep for words. She felt a horror now at the mere thought of how she and Philip might have profited by her husband's death.

It was fortunate that the accident occurred so near the town, for just there the river ran swiftly, and few could have been saved without the aid that speedily came from Linz.

"I have saved him for your sake, Marguerite," whispered Philip as they met each other at the side of her rescued but almost lifeless husband.

"God bless you!" she answered, pressing his hand as she knelt beside the prostrate form of the Colonel.

But Col. Tracy's days were numbered. All was done for him that medical skill could do in that quaint old German city. But he was no longer young, and his previous system had received a shock from which he could not recover. He died, and there, on the shore of the "beautiful Danube" he was buried.

* * * * * *

Two years passed quietly away. Mrs. Tracy had spent them in travel, and had but lately returned to her native land. She and Philip Santwood had parted at Linz without a word or a pledge for the future, and they had never met since. Yet she was not surprised when he suddenly appeared in her drawing-room one evening and spoke once more of his loyal love for her.

"I have never loved any other, Marguerite," he said. "If I may dare to again offer you the name that——"

"Hush!" she answered, lifting her white jeweled hand, with a smile that softened all the dark beauty of her face. "Your noble conduct at Linz has redeemed your name from all dishonor in my eyes. And, even were it otherwise, how dare I, in my sinful pride, condemn you for another's sin?"

A Dizzy Business, Indeed.

Washington Star.

As you stand at the foot of the terrace below and look up at the immense dome of the capital, the workmen there seem midgets, clinging by toes and finger tips to the convex surface. To the nervous spectator the sight is more exciting than interesting. The narrow landings surrounding the lower and upper ends of the dome appear as threads of white marble upon which hardly a fly could obtain a secure foothold, much less a man. You shudder as you see a human form uprear itself from the interior of the cupola and with apparent carelessness climb backward over the narrow ledge to the ladder beneath. That ladder seems fearfully small and unable to support the weight of or give foothold to several men who are upon it. They lean forward at times until only their feet and one hand are on the ladder as they run their brush over that part of the dome within reach. They seem suspended in midair, and you tremble lest the next blast of the autumn wind, which you know blows fearfully hard up at that dizzy elevation, should loosen their frail hold and dash them, shapeless masses, against the cold, cruel stones of the pavement, two hundred feet below. Suddenly, while you gaze, one of them rapidly descends the ladder to the lower landing, which is in reality about eighteen inches wide, but seems to you a mere line, and lightly, recklessly even jumps down upon the projecting edge of the column immediately below. You notice, however, that he climbs back with much more care. And you watch with a sort of fascinating interest till the eye grows dim with its constant gaze, and you seek inside for further information.

Dangerous as this work seems to be, very dangerous as it is in fact, a more gruesome job is that of painting the pedestal on which the Goddess of Liberty stands. The statue is of bronze, the pedestal of iron, and the latter must be frequently painted so as to correspond in hue with the goddess. From the very top of the dome the cupola uprears its graceful proportions without any interior means of access to the statue's pedestal. Ascent must be made vertically from the outside. When the pedestal is to be painted, riggers from the navy-yard are detailed to erect a temporary structure, by which the workman ascends to the top of the cupola. To climb over the outside ledge of the latter, either in coming down or going up, is said to be the most dangerous undertaking. So hazardous is the entire job of painting the pedestal that only one man on the force will do it. He is a native of Capital Hill, and is said to be utterly indifferent to danger, apparently unconscious that he runs any risk whatever.

Going home from church she remarked to her husband: "Did you notice that bald-headed man in front of us, and how young he looked? I never saw any one so young before with a bald head." Then he shut her up by saying: "My dear, I was bald-headed before I was a year old."

THE ONEIDA COMMUNITY.

How it is Being Run Since the Banishment of Noyes and the Abolition of "Mixed Marriage."

Cor. in Chicago Tribune.

Oneida, N. Y., November 14.—Near here is located that institution known as the Oneida Community. This concern numbers about 250 persons, men and women, who believe themselves "perfectionists"—that is, so thoroughly surrendered to religion as to be free from the commission of sin, and worthy of rising above the conventional laws by which the morality of society is supposed to be regulated; hence they have had, like the angels in heaven, neither marriage nor giving in marriage, but live somewhat in common. Each couple were a sort of husband and wife as long as they chose to be, and then they changed off for other partners. This arrangement—which is certainly not of heavenly,but decidedly of the earthly order—naturally gave offense to the people outside the Community, and for years those outsiders endeavored to squelch it; but up to a very recent period their efforts were fruitless. These people made no effort to secure proselytes, but lived to themselves in their own way; nevertheless they had many applicants for admission to their organization

The founder of this institution was John Humphrey Noyes, a graduate of Dartmouth College. A year or so ago there was a strong movement of citizens against the Community, which threatened the indictment of Noyes. Evidence of the most damaging character, both from within and from without the Community, was gathered. Noyes and his friends became alarmed and flight was decided upon;and now, a man of over seventy years of age, he is an exile. The last heard of him, he was at Clinton, Canada, near the Niagara Falls, living with his wife, although three others of the Community women went with her when she joined him. The Community at the time furnished him a home and funds.

Since the departure of Noyes the "Family," or Community, has been governed by a committee of ten men and ten women, who consider all questions arising and direct all business. They have abolished the mixed marriage system, and adopted the monogamic relation. Any marriages contemplated are announced to them, and "acted upon;" but their control over these is only advisory. Many wedding ceremonies have been performed; and those who were married previous to entering the Community are again living together. The functionary who links the couples is an Episcopal minister who has for fifteen years been a member of the Community.

There is no apparent prospect that the Community will be dissolved. Its property, including its branch at Wallingford, Conn., would, it is estimated, sell for about $1,000,000.

The Oneida domain comprises 600 acres, and that of Wallingford 300, both having valuable water-power Prominent among their industries are the making of plated-ware, silks, chains and traps, and the canning of fruits and vegetables. These have been more or less prosperous since their initiation, but of late years especially so. Outside labor is employed in nearly all departments, except the household. During the summer months the Community grounds are a popular place for picnics and excursions from the towns and cities hundreds of miles around. Some days the visitors number as least 1,000 people, and nearly all take dinner there, which affords no small revenue to the Community funds. They furnish no meats—it being one of the principal rules of the Community to abstain from animal food, except on one or two fast days in the year—but their vegetable dinners are said to be delicious. The grounds of the Community are charmingly laid out—immense flower beds and grass plats, with beautiful walks, being a few of their attractions. But the buildings and factories are commonplace, there being no pretensions in that particular.

The members of the Community are generally inferior in looks and intelligence; but there are some among the leaders who may be considered up to to the average, and a few of the women are passably fair. The women all dress in "bloomer" fashion—a kind of half-man and half-woman dress—more flowing in the legs than the Dr. Mary Walker pattern, but which might lead one to suppose that they had stuck their broomstick like limbs into a couple of "Dolly Varden" flour sacks, with a running string at the ankle to "rope" them in, while the garment from the waist down flops about like the trousers of a French zouave. The upper portion of their dress is like a blouse, while their head gear varies—an old hat, broad-brimmed straw, or a calico sunbonnet supplying their millinery outfit. They all wear short hair.

Sonnini and Bedouin Honor.

Gentleman's Magazine.

There is still the old Bedouin honor in observing the wild rules of the desert Should a wayfarer's camel sink and die beneath his burden, the owner need only draw a circle around the dead beast and go on his way, secure of finding his goods untouched when able to return and remove them. And not only is the inviolable reverence for the hospitality of the tent, when once granted fully maintained, but we are often told by travellers that they have occasionally left a tent in the desert for upward of a twelvemonth, and returned to find that not one cord or one peg had been touched.

There have even been cases in which travellers, who according to the rules of the desert, had been quite legitimately robbed have, by a sudden appeal to the honor of their captors, obtained not only their freedom but a restitution of their stolen property. Such was the experience of Sonnini, a scientific French traveller, who when crossing the desert near the Natron Lakes, was surprised by a troop of about 100 well-mounted Bedouins. In presence of such a force, his own small party of six, two of whom were Egyptians, were altogether helpless. They were at once disarmed and stripped of their money, arms, provisions, and most of their clothes. The robbers then spread out their booty on the sand and proceeded to divide it among themselves.

Meanwhile their Arab guide, Hussein, himself a Bedouin, though of another tribe, addressed a pathetic appeal to the robber Chief. "Arabs," said he, "you have stripped a man intrusted to my protection and for whose safety I will stake my life; a man with whom I have eaten, who has slept in my tent and has become my brother! Never again can I enter that tent; never again dare I return to my camp; never more look upon the face of my wife or my children. Arabs! take my life or restore to my brother every article of his property." As he spoke, he snatched back his gun from the Arab who had first seized it, and leveled it at the Chief, determined to shoot him in case of refusal, though well aware that his own life would instantly be forfeit.

His brave bearing, combined with the pathos of his words, touched these sons of the desert. The Sheikh consented that everything should be restored, and though some of his followers sorely grudged giving up their spoils, every article was delivered up, with the exception of a considerable sum of money, which had been extracted from M. Sonnini's purse and divided by the Arabs among themselves. The Sheikh was very particular in inquiring whether the full sum had been restored, but the traveller, deeming himself fortunate to have got off so well assured him that he had received everything right.

Not content with this act of restitution the Arabs now became exceedingly cordial. The Sheik insisted that M. Sonnini should ride his (the Sheikh's) horse, while he walked beside him. The same compliment was paid by the other Arabs to his companions, all of whom thanked Heaven that no blood had been shed, at the same time blaming the foreigners for their temerity in exploring the desert, and thus as it were, offering themselves as fair objects for pillage.

A Practical Temperance Movement

Rochester Democrat.

The Roman Catholic clergy of Syracuse have put their shoulders to the wheel for some practical work in behalf of good morals. They are all friendly to the temperance cause, but they believe in gradual reformatory steps. Last week they united in the following declaration of principles:

"The Catholic clergy of Syracuse, deprecating the abuses arising from the present management of the liquor traffic, viewing with sadness the havoc it makes in the fold of Christ, bewailing the miseries it inflicts upon individuals, families and society, do unanimously unite in exhorting their people,

"First—Not to keep their liquor shops or billiard parlors open on Sunday, and not to frequent any that are open.

"Second—Not to keep their liquor shops or billiard parlors open after eleven o'clock any night, and not to frequent any that are open after that hour.

"Third—Not to sell intoxicating drinks or grant the privilege of their billiard rooms to minors or habitual drunkards

"They are urged to this duty as well by the civil as ecclesiastical law.

"The new penal code challenges the obedience of all good citizens.

"The council of Baltimore uses these words:

"Let the pastors frequently admonish their flocks to shun liquor shops, let them keep back from the sacraments those liquor sellers who encourage excess in drinking, especially on the Lord's Day, let them use all their zeal, through the mercy of Jesus Christ, in eradicating the vice of drunkenness.

"They feel that a compliance with these recommendations will banish misery, vice and degradation from many homes, and procure for those engaged in the liquor business the respect of their fellowmen, as well as peace with their own consciences."

Following out this declaration nearly every priest in charge of a parish preached, on Sunday last, in conformity with a previous agreement to that effect, pointing out the evils of intemperance and exhorting their congregations to subscribe to and aid in the enforcement of the foregoing pledge. They were all urgent in regard to a proper observance of the Sabbath. The movement cannot but have a good effect, and is likely to have a wider sweep than the confines of the city in which it originated.

Better than a Type-Writer.

Bill Nye's Boomerang.

For the first time during our acquaintance with Samuel Davis, of the Carson Appeal, we have received today a letter from him which we were able to read. Evidently he went to the italic case and set up the letter, stuck the matter in the proof press and printed it. It is a luxury to hear from Samuel and know that he is well. It is also cheering to know that he has at last tumbled to the eternal truth, that in order to convey ideas to distant friends he should print them or hire a blond amanuensis with soulful eyes and her own hair.

A Prize-Fight Between Women.

London Standard.

A Twickenham correspondent writes:

"A novel prize-fight has taken place at a small suburban village not many miles distant from Hanwell. For some time past considerable ill-feeling appears to have existed among certain sections of the market garden women employed in the neighborhood, and recently it was decided to settle the matter by a stand-up fight between two of the most prominent and pugilistic members representing the two classes at variance. Accordingly, at the midday meal, the rival parties quietly adjourned to a field at a goodly distance from the public highway where a ring was formed and various preliminaries carried out to the satisfaction of all. The female pugilists, with their seconds, presented themselves, the one being a buxom Shropshire lassie, who is said to have gained proficiency in the noble art of self-defence while travelling a few years ago with a 'boxing saloon' company, and the other a stalwart daughter of Erin, who boasted that she had never been beaten. The two fought for a few minutes only, for in the third round the Irish women (who up to that time had gained a slight advantage by blackening her opponent's eyes) received a blow in the ribs which incapacited her from continuing the fight and her second threw up the sponge, amid the applause of the other side. In the evening the two parties sat down to a substantial supper of beafsteak and onions, and afterwards swore eternal friendship over a gallon of good whisky provided at the expense of the woman who had been vanquished.

Malaria in New England.

Boston Herald.

The malaria is getting to be a serious epidemic in many sections of New England, and thus far the medical profession appears to be unable either to account for its presence or check its slow, though very steady, progress in the localities where it has established itself. Both in the Connecticut and Housatonic valleys, along the banks of the rivers of these names, it has been gradually spreading for two or three years. Various causes, such as stagnant pools of water, decaying vegetation, etc., have been alleged, but exhaustive medical and scientific investigations have failed to shed any satisfactory light upon the strange epidemic. Though the disease is not in itself regarded as dangerous, yet it has been succeeded frequently by typhoid fever, which is always a perilous malady. During the past autumn this latter type of fever has been very general in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, and especially in such sections as were visited by malarial fevers in years past.

$10,000 Damages for a Rat Bite.

Atlanta Constitution.

The Rev. George W. Baker and his wife, Mrs. Caroline H. Baker, have instituted suit against W. Huff, proprietor of the Markham House, for $10,000 as damages for several bites from a rat which Mrs. Baker received while a guest of the Markham in June last. In the petition, which is filed by Mr. Baker, he sets up that he is a baptist minister, and is engaged in the sale of books of a religious character, and at the time of the injury for which he seeks damages his wife was selling a book, on every subscription to which she received from $1.50 to $2 in commissions; that her average monthly earnings were $500 up to the time she was bitten by the rat, and without that injury she would have continued to earn that amount.

In the month of June Mrs. Baker, in the prosecution of her work, came to Atlanta and became the guest of the Markham, of which hotel Mr. Huff is proprietor. She was assigned to a room on the second floor, which she describes as one of the highest-priced rooms in the house. At night she retired after extinguishing the light, when suddenly she felt the cover on the bed move. She reached out her left hand, when her arm was seized by a large rat, which she says was so infuriated that before she could take the hand away she was bitten in eight places. The wounds became inflamed and the arm became badly swollen, and erysipelas set in. The arm appeared as if it would mortify, and it seemed that Mrs. Baker would lose it, and perhaps her life. Mr Baker recites the trouble, expense and pain which has been caused to himself and wife, and puts the damage at $10,000, $900 of which is set down as an actual loss, as what would have been his wife's earnings for three months, and $2000 as an expense for medical attention. Mr. Baker says that Mr. Huff should have kept his beds free from vermin

The Mexican Indians.

New York Times.

In speaking of the Mexicans we are likely to picture the Mexican we are acquainted with — the "greaser" the revolutionist, the receiver of forced loans. But they are not the real Mexicans; they are a mixture of Mexican and Spanish blood, inheriting all the vices of the Spanish conquerors and a few of the virtues of their honest Mexican forefathers. The native Mexican Indian is a very different person, providing, of course, he has not been corrupted by contact with his social superiors. The mahogany-colored Mexican Indians, as still found in interior rural places, are more nearly physically perfect than any other race. In early life they are extremely handsome They have no physical blemishes. A cross-eyed Mexican Indian, or a blind or near-sighted one or a humped-backed or lame one is never seen, unless some of these things have been brought about by accident. They have perfect teeth, and their hair never turns gray, They are as honest as the day is long, kind and hospitable. When they work, which they never do voluntarily, their wages are from 12 to 15 cents a day, and the diet on which they flourish would starve an American. They eat frijoles or little brown beans, and tortillas, flat dough cakes baked in hot ashes. They use no intoxicating drinks, and have scarcely any bad habits. Their faithfulness to a friend is well illustrated in the character of Robinson Crusoe's man Friday.

THE LAND-SLIDE CASE

BY M. TWAIN.

It was in the early days of Nevada Territory. The mountains are very high and steep about Carson, Eagle and Washoe valleys—very high and steep, and so when the snow gets to melting off fast in the spring, and the warm surface-earth begins to moisten and soften, the disastrous land-slides commence.

General Buncombe was shipped out to Nevada in the invoice of territorial officers to be United States Attorney.

One morning Dick Sides rode furiously up to General Buncomb's door, in Carson City, and rushed into his presence without stopping to tie his horse. He seemed much excited. He told the General that he wanted him to defend a suit for him, and would pay him $500 if he achieved a victory. And then, with violent gestures and a world of profanity, he poured out his griefs. He said it was pretty well-known that for some years he had been farming (or ranching, as the more customary term is), in Washoe district, and making a successful thing of it; and furthermore, it was known that his ranch was situated right in the edge of the valley, and that Tom Morgan owned a ranch immediately above it, on the mountain. And now the trouble was that one of those hated and dreaded land-slides had come and slid Morgan's ranch, fences, cabins, cattle, barns and everything down on top of the ranch, and exactly covered up every single vestige of his property, to a depth of about six feet. Morgan was in possession, and refused to vacate the premises—said he was occupying his own cabin, and not interfering with anybody else's—and said his cabin was standing on the same dirt and same ranch it had always stood on, and would like to see anybody make him vacate.

"And when I reminded him," said Sides, weeping, "that it was on top of my ranch, and that he was trespassing, he had the infernal meanness to ask me why didn't I stay on my ranch and hold possession when I saw him coming? Why didn't I stay on it! The blathering lunatic! And, by George! when I heard that racket and looked up that hill it was just like the whole world was a ripping and a tearing down the mountain side—trees going end over end in the air; rocks as big as a house jumping about a thousand feet high and bursting into ten million pieces; cattle literally turned inside out, and a coming head on with their tails hanging out between their teeth. I just took one glimpse of that specktacle, general, and lit out'n the country in three jumps exactly.

"But what grinds me is that Morgan hangs on there and won't move off'n the ranch—says it's his'n and he's going to keep it—likes it better'n he did when it was higher up the hi'l. Mad! Well, I've been so mad for two days I couldn't find my way to town—been wandering around in the bush in a starving condition—got anything here to drink general? But I'm here, now, and I'm a-going to law. You hear me?"

The innocent General was amazed. He said he had suspected before that the people of that territory were fools, and now he knew it. "But," he said, "rest easy, rest easy, and collect the witnesses; for the victory is just as certain as if the conflict was already over."

Sides wiped away the flowing tears and left.

At two in the afternoon Referee Roop's court opened, and the remorseless old joker appeared, throned among his sheriffs, his witnesses and a "packed" jury, and wearing upon his face a fraudulent solemnity so awe-inspiring that some of his fellow-conspirators had misgivings that maybe he had not comprehended, after all, that this was merely a joke. An unearthly stillness prevailed, for at the slightest noise the judge uttered sternly the command:

"Order in the court!"

"Way for the United States Attorney!"

The witnesses were called—legislators, high government officials, ranch men, miners, Indians, Chinamen, negroes. Three-fourths of them were called by the defendant, Morgan, but no matter, their testimony invariably went in favor of the plaintiff, Sides. Each new witness only added new testimony to the absurdity of a man's claiming to own another man's property because his farm had slid down on top of it. Then the Morgan lawyers made their speeches, and seemed to make singularly weak ones—they did really nothing to help the Morgan cause. And now the general, with a great glow of triumph on his face, got up and made a mighty effort; he pounded the table, he banged the law books, he shouted and roared and howled, he quoted from everything and everybody, poetry, sarcasm, statistics, history pathos and blasphemy, and wound up with a war hoop for free speech, freedom of the press, free schools and the glorious bird of America and the principles of eternal justice. [Applause.]

Ex Governor Roop leaned his head upon his hand for some minutes, thinking profoundly, and the still audience waited breathlessly for his decision. Then he got up and stood erect, with bended head, and thought again. Then he walked the floor with long, deliberate strides, and his chin in his hand, and still the audience waited. At last he returned to his throne and seated himself. The sheriff commanded the attention of the court, Judge Roop cleared his throat and said:

"Gentlemen, I feel the great responsibility that rests upon me this day. This is no ordinary case. On the contrary it is plain that it is the most solemn and awful that ever man was called upon to decide. Gentleman, I have listened attentively to the evidence, and the weight of it, the overwhelming weight of it is in favor of the plaintiff, Sides. I have listened also to the remarks of the counsel with high interest—and especially will I commend the masterly and irrefutable logic of the distinguished gentleman who represent the plaintiff. But, gentlemen, let us beware how we allow human testimony, human ingenuity to influence us to our undoing at a moment so solemn as this!

"Gentlemen, it ill becomes us, worms as we are, to meddle with the decree of Heaven. It is plain to me that Heaven, in its inscrutable wisdom, has seen fit to move this defendant's ranch for a purpose. We are but creatures, and we must submit. If Heaven has chosen to favor the defendant Morgan in this marked and wonderful manner; and if Heaven, unsatisfied with the position of the Morgan ranch upon the mountain side, has chosen to remove it to a position more eligible and more advantageous for its owner, it ill becomes us, insects as we are, to question the legality of the act. No—Heaven created the ranches, and it is Heaven' prerogative to rearrange them, to experiment with them, to shift them around it its pleasure. It is for us to submit without repining. I warn you that this thing which has happened is a thing with which the sacrilegious hands and brains and tongues of men must not meddle. Gentlemen, it is the verdict of this court that the plaintiff, Richard Sides, has been deprived of his ranch by the visitation of God! And from this decision there is no appeal."

Buncombe seized his cargo of law books and plunged out of the court-room a raving madman, almost. In all good faith he remained at night and remonstrated with Roop upon the extravagant decision, and implored him to walk the floor and think for half an hour, and see if he could not figure out some sort of modification of the verdict. Roop yielded at last and got up to work. He walked two hours and a half, and at last his face lit up happily, and he told Buncombe it had occurred to him that the ranch underneath the Morgan ranche still belonged to Sides, that the title to the ground itself was just as good as it had ever been, and therefore he was of opinion that Sides had a right to dig it out from under there, and—

The general never waited to see the end of it. He was always an impatient and irascible man, that way. At the end of two weeks he got it through his understanding that he had been played upon with a joke.

It is worthy of remark that a mosquito has concealed in its bill six complete surgical instruments, each so minute as to be indescernible to the naked eye.

The sting of a honey bee, when compared with the point of a needle under a powerful magnifying glass, is scarcely discernable. The point of the needle seemed to be about an inch in breadth.

Gen. Longer, the editor of a newspaper called the Key West Democrat, is 20 years old, forty inches high, and weighs thirty-five pounds. The General was born in San Domingo and raised in Florida.

Prof. Edward C. Pickering, of Harvard College, says that in undertaking to measure the intensity of the light of the satellite of Mars a hole about the twenty-five hundreth part of an inch in diameter was required.

The smallest hogs in the world are quartered in the Zoological Gardens in London. They came from Australia and are known as the "pigmy hogs." They are well formed, are frisky, good-natured, and make excellent pets. They are the size of a wild hare.

A very curious little toy is the microscope containing the Lord's Prayer. The whole prayer is on a piece of glass not larger than the head of a pin, yet it is magnified to such an extent that it can be read easily by looking through the microscope.

Probably the smallest and youngest sea lion in captivity is the one now in the Zoological Garden in Philadelphia, Pa. He is only nine weeks old. When about four weeks old he appeared one morning with a glossy coat of grease. Up to that time his coat of hair was rather tough and non-repellant, and not at all calculated to shed water. The mother is now teaching him to swim.

The smallest baby was born in Chandelaria, Nev., a few weeks ago. The father and mother are strong and healthy, weighing 190 and 160 pounds. The child is a male, perfectly formed. When it first saw light it weighed eight ounces. Its face is about the size of a horse chestnut. The mother's wedding ring was pulled over its foot up to the knee. Three such babes could play hide and seek in a cigar box. It is in good health.

The will of the late Peter Maltzberger, who recently died in Reading, Pa., has just been filed in the Register's office. It is the shortest ever admitted to probate in Berks county. It is as follows: "Reading, Pa., Jan. 29, 80.—I, Peter Maltzberger, do give and bequeath to my wife, Lena Maltzberger, all my personal and real property, absolutely, and I appoint my said wife executrix of my last will and testament.—Peter Maltzberger."

A kind of a dwarf kangaroo is found in Northwestern Texas. Its body is about eight inches long. Its fore legs are not more than an inch and a half to two inches long, and its hind ones are fully six inches. It has a tail about eight inches long, completely bare, except a tuft of long hair on its upper edge. The animal is of a soft blue color. Its only mode of locomotion is by jumping like a kangaroo, and it can jump eight or ten feet.

An ingenious mechanic of Jamestown, N. Y., has constructed a perfect locomotive, said to be the smallest in the world. The engine is only eight and half inches long, with a tender twelve inches long. The pumps throw a drop of water per stroke. As many as 585 screws were required to put the parts together. The engine itself weighs a pound and a half, and the tender two pounds two and a half ounces. The mechanic was at work upon the locomotive at intervals for eight years.

The city of Texarkana, though small in comparison to some of the other cities of the Union, is the most phenomenal. It lies in two States—Texas and Arkansas; hence its name. The State line runs through the centre of its chief street. Its population is 6,000. It is considered the gateway of the Southwest. It is only eight years old, but has the airs of a city of twenty-five years. Four railroads centre there, the climate is like that of Italy and tramps are not tolerated. Money is plenty and the people are prosperous.

The smallest steam engine in the world was made by D. A. A. Buck, of Waterbury, Conn. The engine, boiler, governor and pump stand in a space seven-sixteenths of an inch square, or the area of a gold dollar, and five-eights of an inch high. The engine has 148 distinct pieces of machinery, held together by fifty-two screws. Three drops of water fill the boiler to overflowing. The diameter of its cylinder is a sixteenth of an inch. The length of stroke three thirty-seconds of an inch. The whole engine weighs three grains.

The youngest pensioner in the United States is James W. Crandall, aged 15. He resides in Philadelphia. Crandall had a natural love for the sea, and his mother secured his enlistment in the United States Navy on March 21, 1881. He was on board the United States steamer Constitution, and was taken ill at Cape Hatteras. For six weeks he suffered from typhoid fever. When he recovered he was deaf as a post. The physicians thought it a ruse of the lad to gain his discharge. To test him he was placed between two of the ships largest guns. Both were discharged at once. All expected to find the lad dead from fright, but he simply wrote on a piece of paper: "I think the deck jarred a little, but heard nothing." He was discharged on April 11, and through his lawyer and Pension Claim Agent W. H. Druen he succeeded in obtaining a pension of $13 per month for life.

Six Kicking Mules.

Portland Standard.

A Standard reporter yesterday heard the following story from the lips of a well known citizen:

While in Guatemala recently I was traveling from Esquintla to the capital city over one of the most rugged and villainous roads to be found probably the wide world over. On nearing the summit of a high range of hills, where a turn of the road revealed an immense ravine or chasm some 500 feet deep, I overtook a Mexican riding a mule, with a string of five more attached to the leader. The custom of leading mules in that country is as follows: Their tails are tied in knots, with a bunch of grass or cornstalk leaves fastened to each as a bait. A strip of cowhide is firmly tied from the tail of the leading mule around the neck of the one following, and so on to the last. The rider mounts the leader and urges him on by a vigorous application of the whip and the spur, the baited tails enticing the rest to follow.

The leading mule stumbling over a boulder, the rider commenced to yell, whip and spur. This unlooked for indignity made the mule lash out, reaching the head of No. 2 with a terrible whack. He aroused and insulted, did likewise, with like result to No. 3, who followed suit on to No. 4. Ditto from 4 to 5 and 5 to 6, who, being last, had to kick at vacancy. Here there were six mules all kicking behind, as mules never kicked before. The Mexican swore, spurred and whipped to his utmost. It was soon evident they were backing down the hill with the sheer force of kicking. It was the most ludicrous sight I ever saw. I expected every moment that something would give way, but rider, mules, tails and cowhide held together.

At last the edge of the precipice was reached by the hind mule, who tumbled over, dragging the next after him—still kicking. He pulled the one preceding over, still kicking, and so on until the first was reached—all still kicking. Looking down the ravine, I could dimly discern the mass of mulanity all in a heap, still kicking, and for aught I know, are still kicking there to this day, as a Gautemala mule never tires of kicking.

A Modest Darkey.

"I tells yer, Sam, dat dars a heap in dat sayin', about de arly bird cotches de wum. Dis mornin' I got up jess about day to get me a tonic at de saloon, an de fust objec' I sot eyes on, when I got outen in de street, was a portmania."

"What new disease am dat ar?"

"A portmania, you cussed fool, am a money puss wid $10 in hit."

"Dat's de bery puss dars a dollar reward offered for at de newspaper office."

"I know hit, Sam, but I'se not gwine ter take hit dar, bekase den all my friends will say dat I returned dat puss jess ter hab folks say dere was one honest niggah in dis town; dat I wanted ter get myself puffed in de papers, an' hab folks talk about my honesty—dat I was a boastful niggah. Radder den hab my motives misunderstood by dis heah Austin public, I'll squander de las dollar of dat money in riotous libin."

"I'll do all I kin, Sam, ter help yer outen yer dilemmer."

They both disappeared to slow music in the direction of a barrel house saloon.

Moorish Women's Attire.

The Moorish women appear in the streets entirely enveloped in a number of wide mantles, made of white woolen material or a thinner texture—the so-called haiks—which cover the head and the whole body; the faces are deeply veiled. The costume permits as little of the figure being seen as the veil does of the features. The appearance of the Moorish women inside their houses is quite different. There their figures are to be seen, after they have laid aside the haik and veil. The principal characteristics of this costume are the wide bunched-out drawers, generally white, and on which the rich women are fond of expending very much stuff, so that this article of clothing looks like a shirt reaching to the feet. The chemise, consisting of raw silk or tulle, (black being the color generally chosen, in order to show off a light complexion, while women with dark skin wear white tulle), is perfectly transparent; the wide sleeves are hemmed with red silk inside. They wear a sleeveless jacket over the chemise, with flowers woven in and trimmed with gold embroidery and buttons. A sash is worn round the jacket, or straw-colored yellow silk very much embroidered with gold, which resembles the scarf worn by rich Jewesses on festal occasions. Long fine silk threads hang down at the ends. The hair is hidden under a silk handkerchief interwoven with gold, so that only small plaits are visible at the back of the neck. Bright colored materials are generally chosen for these handkerchiefs. The forehead is adorned with a silver ornament, inclosing the oval-shaped face, like a frame, in a chain of gold and silver richly decorated with small coins which hangs from one temple to the other. Chains, coins and strings of pearls, often of a very costly kind, cover the neck and breast in a very extravagant manner. Shoes without heels are worn over the bare feet or white stockings; they are rounded off in front and made of yellow or red leather.

Had a Better Thing.

Detroit Free Press.

It was real funny to see him brace up as he turned the corner, button on his threadbare black coat, adjust his hat, shove a pencil over his ear, and try to disguise himself. When he had fixed himself he passed down the street, entered a saloon, and walking straight up to the bar he asked:

"Is your name Blank?"

"I expect it is," was the reply.

"John Blank?"

"Vhell, der poys call me Shon."

"Can I speak to you in private, Mr. Blank?"

"You can speak right out here. Nobody is around except my boy, und he don't hear us."

"I thought it would be better to sit down at a table and talk over our glasses of beer."

"I guess not. I can shtand oop und hear all you say."

"Well, Mr. Blank, I have been deputized to ask you if you would be a candidate for Mayor next year."

"Me?"

"Yes. You are said to be one of the most popular men in Detroit. You are rich, popular, liberal, and could be elected by a large majority."

The saloonist looked at him for a moment, and then asked:

"Are you dry?"

"Never so dry in my life."

With a pefectly placid countenance Mr. Blank filled a "schooner" with water, placing it on the bar, and looked the man square in the eye and said:

"I vhas a tousand times obleeged to der poys, but I can't occept dot office."

"You can't! Don't you want to be Mayor of Detroit?"

"No, my friendt. I haf somethings better ash dot. I vas going to run for Governor next time! Come in real often and drink to my success."

The Dying Hendricks.

Dayton Journal.

There is a quiet laugh at the expense of the big doctors in Indianapolis. Ex-Senator Hendricks was recently reported critically ill of erysipelas, with gangrene symptoms, certain, the great doctors of Indianapolis and Louisville said, to carry him to a speedy death. The Senator prepared for his fate calmly, and resignedly waited for the grim messenger. But he did not proceed to die. The day to which the scientific doctors limited his life a blunt old Democratic friend, who was a country practitioner, came to pay his distinguished friend a farewell visit. He looked at the erysipelas of the dying statesman, and suddenly said, with an expressive grunt: "Nothing but a bile,——!" The next day the statesman was at the polls, voting the Democratic ticket. The distinguished scientific physicians are very quiet on the subject. We have the documents for this story.

When Proud Disdain Proves Inadequate.

Detroit Free Press.

A colored man living on Indiana street lately had occasion to ask the advice of the patrolman in that district as to how he should treat some boys who called him names as he passed a certain corner.

"I wouldn't mind 'em was the reply.

"Jist what I reckoned on," said the complainant. "I had my mind made up to treat 'em wid proud disdain. But dar's a naybur o' mine who frows clubs at my dog an' cusses my chil'en. Would you also come de proud disdain over him?"

"Yes, I think so."

"An' dar's a white man libin' round de co'ner who says I stole his ax. I reckon dat proud disdain will fix him if I keep it up long enough!"

"It certainly will."

"Wall, den it am settled dat I doan talk back in none o' dese cases, but dar am one fing I want understood right heah an' now. De nex time I am enjoyin' abenin' siesta on de door-steps and a six-pound cabbage hits me on de middle west-button dar, won't be no proud disdain to be had in any grocery fur a mile roun'. I'se gwine to ris up an' yell fur revenge an' shout fur blood, an' de osifer who interferes wid me am gwine to be rendered unconscious for forty-eight days."

Advice to a Discouraged Lover.

Laramie Boomerang.

She may be giddy, but she has just about sized you up in shape, and no doubt, if you keep on trying to love without her her knowledge or consent, she will hit you with something and put a Swiss sunset over your eye. Do not yearn to win her affections all at once. Give her twenty or thirty years in which to see your merits. You will have more to entitle you to her respect by that time, no doubt. During that time you may rise to be President and win a deathless name.

The main thing you have to look out for now, however, is to restrain yourself from marrying people who do not want to marry you. That style of freshness will, in thirty or forty years, wear away. If it does not, probably the vigorous big brother of some "young lady of seventeen" will consign you to the silent tomb. Do not try to promenade with a young lady unless she gives her consent. Do not marry one against her wishes. Give the girl a chance. She will appreciate it; and, even though she may not marry you, she will permit you to sit on the fence and watch her when she goes to marry some one else. Do not be despondent. Be courageous, and some day perhaps you will get there. At present the horizon is a little bit foggy.

As you say, she may be so giddy that she doesn't want steady company. There is a glimmer of hope in that. She may be waiting till she gets over the agony and annoyance of teething before she looks seriously into the matters of matrimony. If that should turn out to be the case we are not surprised. Give her a chance to grow up, and in the meantime go and learn the organ grinder's profession, and fix yourself so that you can provide for a family. Sometimes a girl only seventeen years old is able to discern that a young intellectual giant like you is not going to make a dazzling success of life as a husband. Brace up and try to forget your sorrow and you may be happy yet.

The Japanese believe that the first man was not Adam but Hu-Sing, who made his wife of clay and baked her forty days. Subsequent developments probably convinced Hu-Sing that he was at least a month too previous in taking her out of the oven.

If you feel drowsy, debilitated, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver, or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR or MEDICINE.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

The cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World.

An EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC for all diseases of the Liver Stomach and Spleen.

Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of all pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

PROVED A SUCCESS

THE PASTILLE

Prof. Harris' Radical Cure

FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE!

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Gland, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

Western Letter.

CLAY CENTER, KAS., Dec. 4, 1882.

ED. COURIER: Having been thinking of writing to you for some time, I will now send you a few items of that may interest you. The weather is very pleasant and has been all fall. We had a little snow the 17th of November, but it soon cleared up. The days are warm and pleasant; nights are a little cool with frosty mornings—the finest weather to gather corn I ever saw. Our town is growing. Will commence to lay brick this week on a new business room. The farmers are busy picking corn and hauling it to market. Corn brought 32 cents per bushel last week till Saturday, when it declined to 24 cents. The cause was not getting cars, the mills and elevators were filled, and they had to pile it on the ground beside their buildings. During the month of November our dealers shipped 250 car loads of grain. From other stations in the county there were not less than 150 cars shipped. That, I think, shows pretty well for a new country. There are thousands of bushels of wheat and corn to come to market. I don't see any reason for any one to get discouraged. The labor for a man is not as hard as in a timbered country. Good roads and plenty of fine weather. There has not been but one day this fall but what a man could pick corn comfortably on account of cold or wind. I would like to call at the court-house and see the offices with democrats. It would certainly be cheering. Well, we did defeat St. John. He had 1160 majority in this county in 1880, and this year 164. What a fall! GEO. W. DOWNS.

Niagara to Dwindle to a Whirlpool.

[New York Sun.]

Prof. Tyndall gives some interesting views in regard to what he terms the "proximate future" of Niagara. At the rate of excavation assigned to it by Sir Charles Lyell, namely, a foot a year, Prof. Tyndall says that 5,000 years or so will carry the Horseshoe fall higher than Goat island, and, as the gorge recedes, it will drain, as it has hitherto done, the banks right and left of it, thus leaving a nearly level terrace between Goat island and the edge of the gorge; higher up it will totally drain the American branch of the river; the channel will be cultivated; the American falls will then be transformed into a dry precipice forming a continuation of the cliffy boundry of the river Niagara, and, lastly, at the place at present occupied by the fall, there will be a whirlpool.

"The Best Practical Art Magazine."

The Art Amateur for 1883, judging from the publisher's announcement, will amply maintain its high reputation as the "best practical art magazine" of the day. To an abundance of beautiful, full-size working designs for painting, embroidery, wood-carving and other art work, with copious practical instructions for all classes of amateur artists, it will continue to add a profusion of charming illustrations of porcelain, furniture, needlework and bric-a-brac; together with an endless supply of entertaining information on decorative and industrial art. Numerous artists' sketches will be published as usual; the leading exhibitions will be largely illustrated and piquantly criticised, and artists of merit will be biographically noticed. A series of beautiful embroidery designs from the South Kensington Royal school of Art Needlework, and a number of articles on china painting by Miss McLaughlin, of Cincinnati, will be published during the year. It is not too much to declare, with the London Academy (which places it above any magazine of the kind in England,) that the Art Amateur is a "marvel of variety, beauty and cheapness." The opinion may be readily verified by sending thirty-five cents for a specimen copy to Montague Marks, Publisher, 23 Union Square, New York. The subscription price is $4 a year.

Harper's Young People.—1883.

An Illustrated Weekly—16 pages, suited to boys and girls of from six to sixteen years of age. Vol IV, commences November 7, 1882.

The Young People has been from the first successful beyound anticipation.—N. Y. Evening Post.

It has a distinct purpose, to which it steadily adheres—that, namely, of supplanting the vicious papers for the young with a paper more attractive, as well as more wholesome.—Boston Journal.

For neatness, elegance of engraving, and contents generally, it is unsurpassed by any publication of the kind yet brought to our notice.—Pittsburg Gazette.

TERMS: Harper's Young People per year, postage prepaid, $1.50. Single numbers, four cents each. Specimen copy sent on receipt of three cents. The volumes of Harper's Young People for 1881 and 1882, handsomely bound in illuminated cloth, will be sent by mail, postage prepaid, on receipt of $3.00 each. Cover for Young People for 1882, 35 cents; postage, 13 cents additional.

Remittances should be made by post-office money order or draft, to avoid chance of loss.

Vick's Floral Guide

For 1883 is an elegant book of 150 pages, 3 colored plates of flowers and vegetables, and more than 1000 illustrations of the choicest flowers, plants and vegetables, and directions for growing. It is handsome enough for the center table or a holiday present. Send on your name and postoffice address, with 10 cents, and I will send you a copy post paid. This is not a quarter of its cost. It is printed in both English and German. If you afterwards order seeds deduct the 10 cents. Vick's seeds are the best in the world! The floral guide will tell how to get and grow them. Vick's flower and vegetable garden, 175 pages, 6 colored plates, 500 engravings. For 50 cents in paper covers; $1.00 in elegant cloth. In German or English.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly Magazine—32 pages, a colored plate in every number and many fine engravings. Price $1.25 a year; five copies for $5.00. Specimen numbers sent for 10 cents; 3 trial copies for 25 cents. James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

The tariff commission will, it is said, advise a reduction of twenty per cent. in the present tariff on imports. A good idea.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

The best salve in the world for cuts, bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

The Secret

of the universal success of Brown's Iron Bitters is simply this: It is the best Iron preparation ever made; is compounded on thoroughly scientific, chemical and medicinal principles, and does just what is claimed for it—no more and no less.

By thorough and rapid assimilation with the blood, it reaches every part of the system, healing, purifying and strengthening. Commencing at the foundation it builds up and restores lost health—in no other way can lasting benefit be obtained.

79 Dearborn Ave., Chicago, Nov. 7.

I have been a great sufferer from a very weak stomach, heartburn, and dyspepsia in its worst form. Nearly everything I ate gave me distress, and I could eat but little. I have tried everything recommended, have taken the prescriptions of a dozen physicians, but got no relief until I took Brown's Iron Bitters. I feel none of the old troubles, and am a new man. I am getting much stronger, and feel first-rate. I am a railroad engineer, and now make my trips regularly. I can not say too much in praise of your wonderful medicine. D. C. MACK.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS does not contain whiskey or alcohol, and will not blacken the teeth, or cause headache and constipation. It will cure dyspepsia, indigestion, heartburn, sleeplessness, dizziness, nervous debility, weakness, &c.

Use only Brown's Iron Bitters made by Brown Chemical Co., Baltimore. Crossed red lines and trade-mark on wrapper.

THE BEST REMEDY

FOR

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

AYER'S
CHERRY PECTORAL.

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency, and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is of acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it. The test of half a century has proven its certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

LOST.

A small boy about the size of a man, barefooted with his father's boots on; had an empty bag on his back containing two railroad tunnels and a bundle of bung holes. He wore a mutton-shop coat with bean soup lining. He was cross-eyed at the back of his neck, and his hair cut curly. He was born several years before his older brother, his mother being present on the occasion. When last seen he was shoveling wind off the state house with the intention of raising money enough to visit Peter's Mammoth Jewelry Shop, at Auburn, Ind., to purchase one of those far-famed latest style James Boss case with G. M. Wheeler movement $50 watch.

His aunt Peter would deem it a favor to learn of his whereabouts, knowing that if he visits Peter's jewelry shop he will jewelry him to death. Having heard from deaf and dumb persons that this is the best jewelry shop in Northeastern Indiana where can be found a large assortment of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Spectacles, Eyeglasses, Musical Instruments and Plated Ware, etc., of the very latest styles and the best materials for the least money; where all goods are warranted as represented or money refunded. Whoever will give information concerning the above child—he has black whiskers and mustache—will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. Given over my head and heel this 30th day of September, anti-peanuts, eighteen hundred and fast asleep, at the Mammoth Jewelry Store Auburn, Ind.

TUTT'S EXPECTORANT

Is composed of Herbal and Mucilaginous products, which permeate the substance of the Lungs, expectorates the acrid matter that collects in the Bronchial Tubes, and forms a soothing coating, which relieves the irritation that causes the cough. It cleanses the lungs of all impurities, strengthens them when enfeebled by disease, invigorates the circulation of the blood, and braces the nervous system. Slight colds often end in consumption. It is dangerous to neglect them. Apply the remedy promptly. A test of twenty years warrants the assertion that no remedy has ever been found that is as prompt in its effects as TUTT'S EXPECTORANT. A single dose raises the phlegm, subdues inflammation, and its use speedily cures the most obstinate cough. A pleasant cordial, children take it readily. For Croup it is invaluable and should be in every family.
In 25c. and $1 Bottles.

TUTT'S PILLS

ACT DIRECTLY ON THE LIVER.

Cures Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Bilious Colic, Constipation, Rheumatism, Piles, Palpitation of the Heart, Dizziness, Torpid Liver, and Female Irregularities. If you do not "feel very well," a single pill at bed-time stimulates the stomach, restores the appetite, imparts vigor to the system. Price, 25c. 35 Murray St., N.Y.

Wanted

AGENTS! For Gen. Dodge's new book,

THIRTY-THREE YEARS AMONG

OUR WILD INDIANS

Introduction by Gen. W. T. Sherman. Contains a truthful and graphic record of the author's observations, thrilling adventures and exciting experiences during 33 years among the wildest tribes of the Great West. Splendidly illustrated with Steel Plates, Fine Engravings and Superb Chromo-Lithograph Plates in fifteen colors. Has received the unqualified endorsement of the most eminent men of our country. Gen. Grant writes: "The best book on Indian and Frontier Life ever written." Bishop Wiley, of Cincinnati, says: "A much needed book and one of immense value." Chicago Interior: "A book of standard and substantial value." Chicago Advance: "No other book contains as full and accurate account of the Indians." Chicago Tribune: "It reads like a romance, and is far superior to any book ever published on the subject." The Chicago Inter Ocean: "It vividly portrays the Indian just as he is."

GLEANINGS.

For every pound of southern cotton there are two pounds of seed.

The Boers, like the Irish, do not conceal their hatred of the English.

Gherkins in glass jars are largely sent to Texas and Central America.

Thirty thousand horses a year are needed to supply New York city's demands.

The post-office department holds more than one million dollars in unclaimed money orders.

"Cedar Croft," Bayard Taylor's home, near Kennett square, Philadelphia, has been sold at auction for $14,050.

The aggregate disbursements for pensions since 1861 have amounted to $560,641,234. The claimants have numbered 472,776.

The finding of the 300 Spanish doubloons under a stump at Raleigh, N. C., set all the idlers of the town at work searching for the mythical treasures of Captain Kidd.

The arctic experience of the Jeannette survivors has proved that the most comfortable foot-wear in winter consists of cotton and woolen socks worn together.

John W. Fleming, the cattle-king of Silver City, New Mexico, has sold his White House ranch to an English company for $100,000. The cattle range is forty miles square.

Rams of choice breed fetch from one thousand to two thousand dollars in Australia, while first-class mutton sells in Adelaide and Sydney for 37 cents the stone—fourteen pounds.

Twenty years ago it required five tons of coal to make a ton of iron rails. Now a ton of steel rails may be produced from the ore with half the amount of coal.

Every twenty-four hours 1,140 trains pass the signal tower of the Pennsylvania railroad, on Filbert street, Philadelphia—a record that can be equaled by no other point on the globe.

The wife of the Chinese Minister at Washington is seventeen years of age. She does not receive visitors, of course, but with an attendant she drives out. She is studying the English language.

Stanley, the African explorer, has so won the confidence of the natives that the white men at the posts established by him are no longer under the necessity of carrying weapons.

The two houses which W. H. Vanderbilt is going to construct on the corner of 54th street and 5th avenue, New York, for his two married daughters, will cost nearly a million dollars.

Engravers are finding it difficult to procure good box-wood. The best forests of Turkey, upon which the bulk of the supply depends, are being wastefully cut, and few new trees are being planted.

Bartholdi's "Liberty Enlightening the World," which is to be placed in New York harbor, will weigh 150 tons. The height from head to foot will be 110 feet, and from the top of the torch 140 feet. It will be finished next year at a cost of about $150,000.

America is responsible for having introduced the vice of chewing gum into England. One American port ships 50,000 pieces of spruce gum each week, thus supplying 10,000 moderate chewers with a day's allowance. Ten thousand women chewing gum and only one port heard from.

Oat clubs are the fashion of the day among Georgia farmers, and as an incentive to hard work and great care in growing their crops are a great success. Every member has to pay two bushels of oats to the member who makes the most oats on a given number of acres, and one bushel to the next highest.

Forty men, mostly railroad laborers, perished of thirst on the California desert west of the Colorado river, last summer. Six dead bodies were found near Pah-Ute-hill, recently. The unfortunate men started from the river, not knowing the perils they would have to encounter.

A prudent citizen of a Vermont town went and plugged the lock on the hand-engine house, so that the next time there was a fire in the town it took the firemen so long to get the engine out, that they didn't arrive at the scene of the conflagration in time to do any damage.

Mrs. Bloomer, whose name will be handed down to posterity through the medium of the bifurcated garmenture for the gentler sex, is still living. She is said to be "a quiet, sweet-faced old lady," dressed without any of the trouseric foolishness of her younger days.

A new way of making boys toe the mark comes to light in the Maine reform-school investigation. A boy testifies that whenever he used a "swear-word" the officers put red pepper in his mouth. Supt. Farrington says that he adopted this kind of punishment on account of its novelty.

A recent visitor to Winnipeg, on the Red river, discovered the ruins of the fort which belonged to a colony founded in 1811 by Lord Selkirk, a Scotch philanthropist. He came over with eighty families, but disheartened by adverses in 1825, he returned to Scotland, some of the people accompanying him, and the rest scattering throughout Canada.

A curious problem has suggested itself in Winnipeg. There are about 600 cows in it and around the city, and these produce 1,200 gallons of milk per day. Yet 4,000 gallons of milk are sold. The question is, how do the milkmen perform the miracle of selling 4,000 gallons of milk out of the 1,200 they get from the cows? The answer is said to be "chalk, lime, salt and Red river water."

The London Truth, discussing the question of fees to serving people, tells this story in illustration of the point that "tips" are seldom calculated on a proper basis: "I remember once coming up in the train from Brighton with the late Mr. Peabody. He had a bag, which a porter carried for him, and he gave the porter a penny and a half-penny. 'I have estimated,' observed the philanthropist, 'the value of that man's time over and above his salary, and what I have given him is rather more than he ought to have.' The porter, however, did not smile."

The Phrenological Journal calls attention to the fact that women have not yet secured the right to whistle. It thinks that they ought to have this right on several grounds. The practice of whistling tends to promote cheerfulness in the whistler, and also to strengthen the lungs. Women need cheerfulness and good lungs just as much as men do and therefore the question is, as the Journal says, why should not women whistle "as they rock the cradle or perform their household duties?"

Mrs. Caudle was not a creature of Jerrold's imagination, it seems. There recently appeared at a court in England, one Caudle, seeking for justice on his wife. He swore that she was always hectoring and lecturing him, that she locked him out, denied him food, and had even attacked him with a knife. For lack of sureties Mrs. Caudle was committed to prison, "a catastrophe," said the local reporter, "that is almost sufficient to make Jerrold turn in his grave."

There is no profession in which a man stands more supremely on his merits than in that of journalism. In many others, promotion is more a question of influence, of good fortune, or of time, than of actual working capacity. In journalism, influence goes for little or nothing, unless there be on the part of the aspirant real efficiency to perform the work that has to be done. There never was greater competition in the press than there is at the present day, and that competition is more likely to become keener than to diminish. It is becoming more and more a question of the survival of the fittest, and special eminence is ever more difficult to attain. The incompetent and inexperienced, therefore, must inevitably go to the wall.—Chambers Journal.

A Little White Frock.

Riding on the front platform of a street-car, the other evening, says the Cincinnati Saturday Night, our attention was attracted to the sudden, and as far as we could see altogether uncalled-for checking up of the car. No one left the car, nor was there anything ahead to impede our progress.

Naturally we glanced at the driver, inquisitively, who, as he turned his weather-beaten visage towards us, answered our inquiring look with, "I always see the flutter of that little white dress here on this trip."

And then he told us, his lips quivering and his voice broken as he spoke, how just at the place where he put on the brake, he had once run over a child, a little girl clad in white. "She looked like my little Nellie, sir," he said, and with a half-sob, "and when they told me that the little one had murmured, just before she died, 'The b d man runned over me, papa,' it nearly broke my heart. They found that I wasn't to blame at all, the child had run from the sidewalk right under the wheels, and before I could check up they passed over the poor little body. Ever since then on this trip, I fancy I see the little white frock on the track; my heart comes up in my throat, and I try to stop the car just as I did on that sad night."

"And you cannot overcome this strange fancy!" we asked.

"No. I've tried to reason myself out of it, but it's no use; and I suppose I shall always have the same feeling as long as I drive a street-car on this line."

"Can you not be transferred to another line?"

"Well, yes, I could; but I'd rather not be. It would seem cowardly for me to desert the route on that account; and somehow, I believe I am a better man for the remembrance, sad as it is. No; I'll stay where I am."

After Fifteen Years of Marriage.

Just fifteen years ago, yesterday, in the City of Griffin, we invested $1.50 in a set of marriage license, and led to the altar one of the prettiest girls in Americus. Since that memorable event, time has come and gone with us pretty well divided up between the bitter and sweet; yet, in the words of the late Daniel Webster—"We still live!" (Right here, our wife peeped over our shoulder, and seeing what we had written about the "bitter and sweet" business, exclaims, "Indeed, my share in the copartnership has been most all bitter.") This, however, with the madame's permission, we quote "irony." All in all, our married life has, perhaps, been as even and successful as most anybody else's; and while we've never been able to "strike it rich," we shall at least be qualified to bequeath to the wife and little ones that which they can never be robbed of—poverty! In conclusion, we will add that our crowd consists of thirty in family, viz: wife 1, Claude 1, Madge 1, and ourself 0—3 and 0—30.—Irwinton, Ga., Southerner.

A Great Grandmother's Wedding.

On Monday, the 6th instant, at high 12, a marriage ceremony took place at Howland's that we think should not go unnoticed. The parties who took the nuptial vows were Leander Randall, of North Rochester, aged seventy-four, and Mrs. Philena H. Landers, of Acushnet, aged seventy-three. This is the second marriage of Mr. Randall and the fourth marriage of Mrs. Landers. There were four generations of Mrs. Landers' decendats present—four daughters, three granddaughters, two grandsons and four great grandchildren. The ceremony took place at the residence of the son-in-law of Mrs. Landers, Mr. H. M. Mawhinney, and the bridesmaids were the two oldest granddaughters, aged thirty-two years. Her great grandson, aged twelve years, stood up with his grandmother at the ceremony.—New Bedford Mercury.

Tutt's Pills Sugar Coated.

Tutt's Pills are now covered with a Vanilla Sugar Coating, making them as pleasant to swallow as a little sugar plum, and rendering them agreeable to the most delicate stomach. This is a great addition (were it possible to add anything to these very popular and wonderful efficacious pills) as it destroys the bitter taste and protects them from changes of climate thus preserving their virtue in all parts of the world.

The consumer of Tutt's Pills will doubtless appreciate this improvement, which has been made at great expense to the proprietor while the price remains the same as before.

Just now the good "temperance democrats" of this place are jubilant over the prospects of Mr. Moody's nomination to the speakership.

After all the "hubbub" that has been recently created concerning Rev. Lowman, that gentleman contrary to the predictions of certain fanatical "wise owls," has failed to present a theology so changed as to disgrace his previous usefulness.

The new Cedar Creek store, Erdly, Lung, Miller & Co., is cleared for action. One barrel of best coal oil. Call boys and smoke.

We are informed that Chas. Dudley is having splendid success at No. 6, Keyser township. We are glad to hear it, for Charley is a good, earnest worker, and deserves it.

I may be found at the county treasurer's office, in the town of Auburn, on and after January 1, 1883.

Taxes may be paid in full or in two installments. The first installment, including all road taxes, can be paid on or before the third Monday in April, 1883; the second installment on or before the first Monday in November, 1883. If the first installment is not paid when due, both installments become delinquent, ten per cent. will be added, and I shall at once proceed, as the law requires, to collect the same, together with the costs that may accrue, by distress and sale of personal property.

Examine your receipts before leaving the office, and see that all your property is included.

No county orders will be paid to any person owing delinquent taxes.

The annual sale of lands and lots for delinquent taxes will occur on the first Monday in March, 1883.

Come early and avoid the rush of the last few days.

The books will positively be closed on the evening of the third Monday in April, and no one will be allowed to pay after that date without penalty.

Parties sending by others, or by letter to pay tax, should not fail to send description of their lands and lots.

No receipts will be made out hereafter, for any party, until they are ready to pay for the same.

L. J. MILLER,
Treas. DeKalb County.

THE CRUELTY OF NATURE.

O. S. MONTGOMERY.

I.

We are taught that Nature is a living mind,
A heart of untold pity, but we know
That Nature is the unweary, cruel foe
Of our courageous, suffering humankind.

It be[illegible] unmoved and blind;
And we resist it, brave it as we go,
Until we die like dogs and cast our woe
Into the darkness of the undivined.

It is a beautiful and deadly power,
Whose curse is still upon us while it gleams
Through the soft balm of tender Summer moons;

Oh! I have seen it blast in one sad hour
Lives that were dearer to me than my dreams
And worth the glory of the stars and moons.

II.

With earthquake, lightning, and with snows that freeze
The passion of the heart; with desert heats
And drought and flood, and fire; with rains and sleets
And glaciers thundering from the polar seas;

With tortures that are subtle as a breeze
Blowing the breath of fever through our streets;
With the quick poison lurking in its sweets;
And with the ghastly terrors of disease—

This Nature crushes and destroys us, holds
Our lives as little precious as the worm
Or as the unspiritual bird of air.

Even when our love like a young flower unfolds,
Or when our fragile hope grows high and firm,
It sweeps us into frenzy and despair.

III.

Yet, we have that within us which defies
The brutish wrongs of Nature; and we fight Against them with intrepid will and might,
And with a desperate faith that never dies—

With a faith that puts a fire into our eyes,
A lion-strength into our blood, a light
Into our souls whose melancholy night
Is haunting as the gloom of boreal skies.

We are like sailors battling with the force
Of the tumultuous ocean, breast to breast
With the wild dagger-thrusting of the storm,

Yet, while destruction blackens in their course,
Fierce with a mad ambition to contest
The winds that kill, and darken, and transform.

THE MAIN BRIDGE.

It was past midnight—the lights on the stone bridge which crossed the river Main at Frankfort were still burning, though the footsteps of passengers had died away for some time on its pavement, when a young man approached the bridge from the town with hasty strides. At the same time another man, advanced in years, was coming toward him from Sachenhausen, the well-known suburb on the opposite side of the river. The two men had not yet met, when the latter turned from his path and went toward the parapet from the bridge into the Main.

The young man followed him quickly and laid hold of him.

"Sir," he said, "I think you want to drown yourself."

"What is that to you?"

"I was going to ask you to do me the favor to wait a few minutes, and allow me to join you. Let us draw close to each other, and, arm in arm, take the leap together. The idea of making the journey with a perfect stranger who had chanced to come for the same purpose, is really interesting. For many years I have not made a request of any human being; do not refuse me this one, which must be the last."

The young man held out his hand. His companion took it. He continued with enthusiasm:

"So be it; arm in arm. I do not ask you who you are, good or bad—come, let us drown."

The elder of the two, who had at first been in such a hurry to end his existence, now restrained the impetuosity of the younger.

"Stop sir," he said, while his weary eyes tried to examine the features of his companion. "Stop sir. You seem to be too young to leave life in this way; for a man of your years life must have still bright prospects."

"Bright prospects! In the midst of rottenness and decay, vice and corruption! Come, let us end it."

"And so young! Let me go alone and do you remain here. Believe me there are many good and honest people who could render life charming to you. Seek them and you are sure to find them."

"Well, if life presents itself to you in hues so bright I am surprised that you wish to leave it."

"Oh, I am only a poor, sickly man, unable to earn anything, who can endure no longer that his only child, an angel of a daughter, should work day and night to maintain him. To allow this longer I must be a tyrant, a barbarian."

"What, sir," exclaimed the other, "you have an only daughter sacrificing herself for your sake?"

"And with what patience, what sweetness and love, what perseverance! I see her sinking under her toil and her privations, and not a word of complaint ever escapes her pallid lips. She works and starves, and still has a word of love for her father."

"And you will commit suicide? Are you mad?"

"Dare I murder an angel? The thought pierces my heart like a dagger," said the old man sobbing.

"Sir, you must have supper with me; I see a tavern open yonder. Come, you must tell me your history, and I will tell you mine. There is no occasion for you to leap into the river. I am a rich man; your daughter will no longer have to work and shall not starve."

The old man allowed himself to be dragged along by his companion. In a few minutes they were seated at a table in the tavern, with refreshments before them, and each examining the features of the other.

Refreshed by viands, the old man began thus:

"My history is soon told. I was a merchant's man, but fortune never favored me. I had no money myself, and loved and married a poor girl. I could never begin business on my own account. I took a situation as bookkeeper which I held until I became useless from age, and younger men were preferred to me. Thus my circumstances were always straitened but my domestic happiness was complete. My wife was an angel in hope, kindness and fondness, was good and pious, active and affectionate; and my daughter is a true image of her mother. But age and illness have brought me to the last extremity, and my conscience revolts against the idea of the best child in the world sacrificing her life for an old and useless man. I cannot have much longer to live, and I hope the Lord will pardon me for cutting off a few days or weeks from my life in order to preserve that of my dear Bertha."

"You are a fortunate man, my friend," exclaimed the young man. "What you call misfortune is sheer nonsense, and can be cured. To-morrow I shall make my will, and you shall be the heir to my possessions, and to-morrow night I shall take the leap from the Main bridge alone. But before I leave this world I must see Bertha, for I am anxious to look upon one who is worthy of the name of human being."

"Sir, what could have made you so unhappy at this early age?" said the old man, moved with compassion.

"I am the only son of one of the richest men in Frankfort. My father died five years ago and left me heir to an immense fortune. From that moment every one that has come in contact with me has endeavored to deceive and defraud me. I was a child in innocence and confiding. My education had not been neglected, and I possessed my mother's loving heart. My friends, to whom I opened my heart, betrayed me and then laughed at my simplicity; in time I gathered experience and my heart was filled with distrust. I was betrothed to a rich heiress, possessed of all fine accomplishments; I adored her with enthusiasm and love; I thought she would repay me for every disappointment. But I soon saw that she wished to make me her slave and yoke all other men beside to her triumphal chariot. I broke the engagement and selected a poor but charming girl, a sweet, innocent being, as I thought, who would be my life's own angel. Alas! I found her one day bidding adieu with tears to a youth whom she loved. She had accepted me for my wealth only. My peace of mind vanished. I sought diversion in travel. Everywhere I found the same hollowness, the same treachery, the same misery. In short, I became disgusted with life, and resolved this night to put an end to the pitiable farce."

"Unfortunate young man," said the other, with tears of sympathy, "I pity you. I confess I have been more fortunate than you. I possessed a wife and daughter who came forth pure and immaculate from the hand of the Creator. The one has returned to Him in the whiteness of her soul, and so will the other."

"Give me your address, old man, and permit me to visit your daughter to-morrow. Also give me your word of honor that you will not inform her, or insinuate in any manner, that I am a rich man."

The old man held out his hand.

"I give you my word. I am anxious to convince you that I have spoken the truth. My name is William Schmidt, and there is my address," giving him at the same time a bit of paper which he drew from his pocket.

"And my name is Karl Traft. I am the son of Anton Traft. Take these bank notes, but only on one condition, that you do not leave the house until I fetch you from it. Waiter! a bedroom for this gentleman. You require rest, Herr Schmidt. Good-night. To-morrow you will see me again."

CHAPTER II.

In one of the narrow and ill-lighted streets of Sachenhausen, in an attic of a lofty and unsightly house, sat a blonde about 20 years of age busily employed with her needle. The furniture of the room was clean and tasteful. The girl's whole dress would not have brought her many kreutzers, but every article fitted her as well as if it had cost hundreds. Her fair locks shaded a face brightened by a pair of eyes of heavenly blue. The spirit of order, modesty, and cleanliness reigned in everything around her. Her features were delicate, like those of one noble born, her eyes betrayed sleeplessness and anxiety, and ever and anon a deep sigh rose from the maiden's breast. Suddenly steps were heard on the staircase, and her face lighted with joy. She listened and doubt seemed to shadow her brow when there came a knock at the door, which made her tremble so much that she almost wanted the courage to say, "Come in." A young man shabbily dressed, entered the room and made a low and awkward bow.

"I beg pardon, miss," he said; "does Herr Schmidt live here?"

"Yes, sir; what is your pleasure?"

"Are you his daughter, Bertha?"

"I am."

"Then it is you I seek. I am from your father."

"For heaven's sake, where is he? Something must have happened—he has stayed away from home all night."

"The misfortune is not very great."

"Oh, my poor, poor father! what shall I hear?"

The young man seemed to observe these visible marks of anxiety with great interest. He said:

"Do not be faightened; it is nothing of great importance. Your father met last night an old friend, who invited him to a tavern. They had supper together, and when the landlord came for the bill your father's friend had decamped and left him to pay for the score. He had not sufficent money for this, and now the host will not let him go until he is paid, and declares that unless he gets his money he will send him to prison."

"To prison!" exclaimed the girl. "Can you tell me how much the bill come to?"

"Three florins and a half."

"Oh, God!" sighed the girl. "All I have does not amount to more than one florin, but I will go at once to Madame Berg and beg her to advance me the money."

"Who is Madame Berg?"

"The milliner for whom I work."

"But if Madame Berg does not advance the money—what then?"

"I am afraid she will refuse. I already owe her 1 florin, and she is very hard."

"For what purpose did you borrow the money from her?"

The girl hesitated to reply.

"You must trust me."

"Well, my father is very weak, and requires strengthening. I borrowed money to get a quarter of a fowl for him."

"Under these circumstances I fear Madame Berg will not give you any. I possess nothing. Have you any valuables left upon which we could raise some money."

Bertha considered for a moment.

"I have nothing," said she, at length, "but my poor mother's prayer-book. On her death-bed she entreated me not to part with it, and there is nothing in the world I hold more sacred than her memory, and the promise I gave her; but still, for my father's sake, I must not hesitate." With trembling hand she took the book down from the shelf. "Oh, sir," she said, "during many a sleepless night I have been accustomed to enter the secret thoughts of my heart on the blank leaves at the end of the book. I hope no one will ever know whose writings they are; you will promise me that!"

"Certainly, Bertha. I will take care that your secrets are not profaned. But now, get ready, that we may go.

When she left the room to put on her bonnet and shawl Karl Traft (for the young man was no other than our hero) glanced over the writing in the book, and his eyes filled with tears of emotion and delight as he read the outpourings of a pure and pious heart; and when they had left the house together, and she was walking beside him with a dignity of which she seemed unconscious, he cast upon her looks of respect and admiration."

They went first to Madame Berg, who did not have the money required, but assured the young man that Bertha was an angel. Certainly this praise Mr. Traft valued higher than the money he asked for. They pawned the book, and the required sum was made up. Bertha was happy.

"But if you spend all the money to-day," remarked the young man, "on what will you live to-morrow?"

"I do not know, but I trust in God. I shall work the whole night through."

When they went to the tavern the young man went first, to prepare Mr. Schmidt for the part he wished him to act; then he fetched Bertha. It is impossible to describe the joy he felt when he saw the young girl throw herself into her father's arms and press him to her heart.

She paid the bill and triumphantly led him home. Traft accompanied them and said he had a few kreutzers in his pocket; she had better go and get something to eat. It was late before Traft went home that night; but the leap from the Main bridge was no more thought of. He came to the house every evening, he said, to share with them his scanty earning.

About a fortnight after, as he was going away one evening, he said to Bertha:

"Will you become my wife? I am only a poor clerk, but I am honest and upright."

Bertha blushed and cast her eyes to the ground.

A few days after the young couple, simply but respectably attired, and accompanied by Herr Schmidt, went to church, where they were married in a quiet way. When they came out man and wife, an elegant carriage was standing at the door, and a footman in rich livery let down the steps.

"Come," said the husband to his bewildered wife, who looked at him in amazement.

Before she could utter a word the three were seated in the carriage driving away at a quick pace. The carriage stopped before a splendid house in the best part of Frankfort. They were received by a number of domestics, who conducted them to apartments decorated in the most costly manner.

"This is your mistress," said Traft to the servants, "and her commands you are henceforth to obey. My darling wife," said he, then turning to Bertha, "I am Karl Traft, one of the wealthiest men of this city."

Who Would Be A Royal Baby?.

Toledo Blade.

The birth of a royal child in Spain is attended with a world of formalities that hint to a time when they were as liable to palm off a bogus baby on the other heirs as a South Carolina bourbon is to stuff a ballot box. The bedroom occupied by the queen has no means what ever of communicating outside, and its only door is one opening into a large reception room. At the approach of the crititical moment all the foreign ambassadors, the members of the royal family, and a large number of the high nobility—some two hundred and fifty persons in all—are notified, and hastily repairing to the palace in their official robes, assemble in the reception room. It is the hereditary privilege and duty of certain ladies of noble families to be present with the queen in the room, where are also the royal physicians, and the king. As soon as the child is born it is placed naked on a silver salver, and carried by the king to the assembly in the reception room, where he shows it to each person. After this is done, a formal statement of the affair is drawn up by the minister of justice, and signed by every one present.

The Havoc of War.

A fearful picture of war's destruction of men, not only in killed and wounded, but by hardships of campaigning, is presented by the report of the United States Commissioner of Pensions, in the statistics of the whole number of men enlisted in the army, and of the number which have applied for pensions, and of dead who have left relatives who are entitled to pensions. The report shows a total number of enlistments, as reported by the Adjutant General, of 35,780,108. Of these 716,878 were counted more than once by reason of re-enlistment, leaving the actual individual enlistments 2,083,271. Of these there are living who have not applied for pensions, 1,099,469. The living who have applied for pensions are 458,552. The number of dead leaving pensionable relatives who have applied is 297,568. The number of dead leaving no pensionable relatives is 220,000. Thus, of the whole number of actual individual enlistments, more than one-third are included in the lists of dead, either with or without a pensionable application, and of those who have applied or who have legal claims. Out of the whole number of soldiers who served in the war for any length of time, pension has been applied for on behalf of 28 per cent.

A PECULIAR CUSTOM.

The Manner in Which Chinamen Loan Money to One Another.

Sacramento Bee.

When a Chinaman finds himself financially embarrassed, and needs money, he does not do as other people do, borrow it, and either gives a promissory note or chattel mortgage as security for the same, but he forms what in Chinese is called an "owey." This is something which is peculiarly Chinese, and requires a minute explanation, in order that it may be clearly understood. The lowest "owey" is fixed at $1 for each person forming it, and the highest $200. For instance, if a Chinaman needs $100, he will call on a number of his friends, not to exceed ten, and tell them that he wishes that amount of money, and desires to form an "owey." If it is decided that it shall be a $20 "owey" then five persons in addition to the originator combine. For the purpose of explaining the "owey" the originator will be designated as Sam, and his five friends as Yow, Yen, Kow, Chew and Hing. At the first meeting of the six the originator receives from each of the other five $20, making up the amount he requires. This is a loan made to him without interest, which he must repay at the rate of $20 per month. At the time this sum is advanced the other five bid for the privilege of the "owey" for the running month. Each one writes on a slip of paper the amount of the premium he will give. These slips are rolled separately and thrown into a bowl and shaken up, after which each slip is unrolled and the amount noted. The "owey" is then awarded to the one having bid the highest premium. Yen, Kow Chew and Hing each pay $19, which is the amount less the premium, and amounting in all to $76; and if he adds the amount of his own contribution it will make a total of $96, or equal to the amount advanced to Sam, less $4, which is reckoned as interest, allowing $1 for each of the four who advance the money. At the close of the first month Sam, the originator, is by the rules which govern this system of money lending, forced to notify all who belong to the "owey" of the next meeting. At this meeting Yen, Kow, Chew and Hing are the only ones who are permitted to offer a premium of $1 is again offered, and it having been awarded to Yen, the other three pay him $19 each, and Sam and Yen pay their first monthly installment of $20 each. At the next meeting only three Kow, Chew and Hing can bid, and if the same amount of premium is bid, and it is awarded to the first of of the three named, the other three, Sam, Kow and Yen pay him $20 each. At the next meeting only two, Chew and Hing, are permitted to offer a premium. The one to whom the "owey" is awarded, receives from the other the amount, less the premium, and from the other four $20 each. At the next and last meeting, the only one remaining, he receives from the other five $20 each, making the full sum of $100. By this method the originator of the "owey," who obtains the money without interest, has the use of $100 for one month, $80 for four months, $60 for three months, $40 for two months and $20 for one month. In return for the use of the money he is forced to act as collector for the other members of the "owey," who are required to pay the monthly instalments of $20. He also assumes a risk, and that is, if any member of the "owey" does not pay at the appointed time he has to be responsible for the amount due. The other members of the "owey," who by instalment advance money to one another, receive interest for the amount of their advances, and each, in turn, has the use of the total amount of the "owey" in the same proportion as the originator. This method of money lending is in vogue among all classes, and women often form "oweys" among themselves. When the slips of paper before alluded to are drawn from the bowl it often happens that two or more contain the same amount of premium. In such an event the "owey" is given to the one whose slip is first drawn. The "owey" may be composed of any number not exceeding ten besides the originator, and the greatest amount that may be raised by such means is $2,000. When an "owey" is formed and the amount to be awarded to the originator is $500, or in excess thereof, he is required to treat those who loan him the money to a dinner, not to cost less than $2 a head. Oftentimes a high premium is bid for the privilege of the "owey" for each succeeding month, and this gives the lenders considerable interest for the use of their money.

A Living Clock.

Lafayette Courier.

The question, "Will wonders never cease?" finds an answer in Captain Cochran's sturdy reply "Never." Last evening Thurst Martin, of the West Side Mills, telephoned us that he was coming over to see us, and for the reporter to wait for him, which, of course, the reporter did. When he entered he told us that he had heard of a most wonderful phenomenon out on Grand Prairie, and was going out to see it, and invited us to go out with him. At first we were incredulous at what he had told us, and hesitated as to accepting the invitation, fearing he had some Puckish prank to play, but, finally concluding that a ride would not be uninteresting in itself, consented to go along. We were to start at 8 o'clock in the morning in order to get back in time for our day's work. Promptly at that hour Thurst and a German friend of his who resides in the neighborhood of the phenomenon was on hand, and the procession moved.

It was a delightfully frosty and exhilarating morning, and we enjoyed the ride to the utmost. Arriving at our destination, a neat little frame cottage, about half past six, and entering the parlor, were introduced to a middle-aged German lady by the name of Mrs. Martha Grossfelt, a widow with two children—one a girl of perhaps 15 or 16, and the other a boy of about 8 or 9 years. They are just over from the Fatherland. The mother, an industrious woman with a little means of her own, has rented a small farm, which she is cultivating, with the help of her daughter and a hired man. Thurst's friend, a farmer by the name of Grinley, or Grindley, beckoned to the boy, whom he addressed as Fritz and said something to him in German. The urchin, a bright-eyed, flaxen haired, intelligent-looking little Teuton, approached us smilingly, removed a wide belt, probably ten inches wide, from about his waist, and revealed to our astonished gaze the strangest sight we ever beheld. On the cuticle, above his stomach, was pictured, as beautifully as if done by the hand of a master, the perfect representation of a clock. Over the dial, which was almost white, were the figures and marks, in a dull, yet distinct red, which divided the hours and the minutes. The hour and minute hands, the second hand and its divisions, were plainly depicted, as also the pendulum and framework, this latter fading at the edge into the natural tint of the body. At the top of the clock was the miniature representation of a Swiss cottage, with closed double doors. The whole representation occupied the space of perhaps eight inches square. The most wonderful part of it all, however, has not yet been told—the clock was evidently running! The mystic hands were moving, but marked a quarter to 12, when it was not quite by our time. The pendulum was swinging slowly back and forth, and we even fancied we could hear the smothered tick! tick! of the mechanism. The hands swept steadily on until they marked five minutes of 12, when we were sure we heard a faint "click!" When the hands pointed the hour of noon, the double doors of the Swiss cottage disappeared, and revealed a gaudy cuckoo of the most awkward and clumsy pattern, which clapped its wings and went through the motions of crowing, but emitted no sound. Little Fritz then replaced his belt and took his seat, and, when astonishment had given place to curiosity, we began a brisk cross-examination through the assistance of our interpreter. We learned that the family were natives of Wurtenburg, and had resided all their lives in the little village of Ulbingen, near Rentilgen, not far from the Neckar river. Nothing remarkable or abnormal had ever been noticed in the families of either of the child's parents, but a few weeks before Fritz was born, however, the mother, who was very nervous at the time, was visiting at her brother's house, in Re[illegible]n, and had a terrible fright from a cuckoo-clock that stood on the dining-room fireplace shelf. From the effects of this fright she was thrown into a violent attack of brain fever in which she imagined she was a clock and her stomach a dial. During the fever, or before it had fully spent its force, little Fritz came into the world, bearing his marvelous birth-mark, which, the lady said, had kept perfect time, excepting when he was sick, when it behaved in a very eratic manner, and, once, when he came near dying with fever, the hands spun round with startling velocity, the little cuckoo appearing every few minutes to flap its wings and crow. It was during this fever that the cuckoo lost his voice. Previous to that time his 'cukoo! cuko-o!' could be heard throughout the extent of a large room. On our suggesting that the boy was not a correct time piece, the mother explained that the time was the correct time of his native place, from which it never varied except in sickness, and immediately corrected itself when the boy got well. She further said that watchmakers of Ulbingen, a little village on the outskirts of which they had lived, were in the habit of consulting him to obtain the most accurate time. The villagers used to stop him also to learn the time of day, which Fritz could give them to the second, without ever consulting his birth mark.

A Stone with a History.

Oxford (Miss.) Falcon.

Ben Milan, who resides in Mississippi near the Marshall County line, and who is the owner of the wonderful madstone, of which we made mention some months ago, dropped in to see us on Saturday last while on a business trip to our city. Mr. Milan informs us that since the stone has been in possession of his family 1,229 cases have been treated in all, not one of which failed to recover. An average of [illegible] patients test the curative powers of the stone annually, which number is about three times as great since as before the war. The history of this wonderful stone as we get it from Mr. Milan, is that in 1810 a Doctor. Baker of Alabama, brought the stone from China, where it was known as the "snakestone", being used by the Chinese to cure snake and spider bites and those of other poisonous insects. Soon after Dr. Baker returned to Alabama he began to test the stone on persons bitten by mad dogs, and with great success, and so used it until his death, when, with other effects, the stone was sold and became the property of Garvis Milan (father of Ben.) and three of his neighbors. One at a time the joint owners sold out until Mr. Milan became proprietor of the stone and at his death willed it to his son, the present owner, who only a few days since refused for it $7,200.

Five of a Kind.

A good many people in western Pennsylvania are considerably excited in regard to several alleged cures of sick or diseased persons in answer to prayer. Five of these cures have been reported in the last two weeks—two in Washington county, two in Allegheny city, and one in Pittsburg. The first is that of Richard Huffman, who lives on Pigeon Creek, Washington county. His lower limbs had been paralyzed for seven or eight years to such an extent that he could scarcely move around the house with the assistance of crutches. He has some friends in Buffalo, N. Y., who, on Thursday night of last week, met by appointment to pray for his recovery. At the same hour Mr. Huffman crawled out to his wagon-shed at his home in Washington county—crawled upon his hands and knees in rain and mud—and while his Buffalo friends were presenting their petitions to the Throne of Grace for his recovery he raised his voice in earnest supplication to the same end. He had prayed but a few moments, when he heard a voice, as he relates, saying, "Arise and walk." He obeyed the summons, arose to his feet, threw away his crutches, and walked into the presence of his family and his brother-in-law, feeling as sound and vigorous and as capable of locomotion as at any period of his life. His family and friends were greatly astonished at the sudden change in his condition, and they all agree with him that the cure was effected in answer to prayer. He has always been a religious man, and has been a member of the M. E. Church for many years. Since he was cured he has spent much of his time traveling through Washington and adjoining counties telling the country folk the story of his sickness and miraculous cure, and urging them to seek the same Physician if they would be healed of spiritual and physical infirmities.

The next case is that of Miss Rodgers, also of Washington county. She had been helpless for more than two years from a spinal affection. Her friends consulted eminent physicians here and in Philadelphia, but to no purpose. The most they could do for her was to enable her to sit up in bed for a few minutes at a time. Mr. Huffman visited her and induced her to try the prayer cure. She consented, prayed and wrestled nearly all of one night, fell into a slumber toward morning, and awoke a sound woman, able to walk about the house and assist in domestic duties. She is now, apparently, as well as ever she was, has no pains or aches, and feels perfectly happy. She, as well as her friends, believe her restoration to health was in answer to prayer.

The third case is that of a boy named Kephart, who lives in Allegheny. He had been disabled for two or three years by a white swelling. A few months ago a piece of bone, six inches long, was removed from his leg. A priest hearing of the case, requested that the boy be taken to him. He put his hand on the lad's head, and prayed that he might be healed. When he had finished, he told the boy to put his foot on the floor and try to walk. He did as commanded, and walked about the room, much to his own surprise and that of the few persons who were present. The boy has continued to mend ever since, and bids fair to be perfectly restored in a few weeks. This cure is attested by three or four reliable gentlemen, who are acquainted with the circumstances.

The fourth case is that of a little girl in Pittsburg. She has suffered from spinal disease for a year or two, for the last six months being unable to leave her bed without assistance. She was told of the miraculous cures in Washington county and Allegheny City, and said she believed God would cure her too, and she meant to ask Him that very night. Sure enough, when night came she commenced praying, and kept it up until she fell asleep. Next morning she was the first one of the family to get out of bed, greeting her parents with a kiss, and telling them that God had answered her prayer and made her well again. She is now going to school.

The fifth and last case is that of Miss Dysert, who resides on Rebecca street, Allegheny City. She had been a paralytic for seven months, during which time she was unable to move her lower extremities. Friday night she spent in prayer for recovery. Yesterday morning she arose from the bed and walked about the house. To-day she attended church. She attributes her cure to God, who mercifully answered her prayer.

The facts narrated in each of these cases are well known where the subjects live.

The Rev. Coovert, of the Church of God, exhibited a letter signed by 24 reputable citizens of Franklin, Pa., setting forth that on Dec. 1881, the wife of Rev. J. W. Bloyd, of that place, had been instantaneously cured of inward cancer, after several physicians had pronounced her incurable, and testifying their belief that the cure was in answer to the prayers of Elder Young, who is pastor of a congregation in Butler county. His services are given without charge. He is now in Philadelphia, praying with afflicted persons.

Little Mulkittle and Samson.

Arkansaw Traveler.

"Pa," said the Rev. Mulkittle's little son, "Samson was a strong man, wasn't he?"

"Samson was the strongest man that ever lived."

"Tell me about him."

"It was intended that Samson should be the strongest man, and before he was born—"

The bewildered expression on the child's face arrested the minister in his narrative.

"Before he was born?" asked the boy.

"Yes; before—that is before he was found in the hollow stum—"

"Just like little sister."

"Yes; just before he was found an angel appeared and foretold of his strength, saying no razor must touch his head."

"Was the angel afraid that the razor would cut him?"

"No; the angel meant that his strength lay in his hair, and that his hair must not be cut off."

"If I let my hair grow long can I lift more than I can now?"

"I don't know about that."

"Are women any stronger than men?"

"No."

"But they've got longer hair?"

"Yes; they have longer hair."

"A woman could whip you, could she?"

"No; not easily."

"Was Samson a Democrat?"

"I don't know."

"But why don't you know? I'd know if I was as old as you. How many was it that Samson killed?"

"One thousand."

"He was bad, wasn't he?"

"No."

"But when a man kills anybody he's bad?"

"The Lord was with Samson."

"But the Lord says you musn't kill anybody. Did Samson go to Heaven?"

"I suppose so."

"He is the strongest angel there, ain't he?"

"You are getting very foolish again."

"But I want to know. Will you know Samson when you go to Heaven?"

"I suppose so."

"But you won't fool around him, will you. If he was to hit you he'd break your wings, wouldn't he?"

"Go to your mother. The next time you attempt to question me about the Bible I shall whip you."

FOUNDED UPON FACT.

New York Daily News.

Ellen Tresdon was a lovely specimen of southern girlhood. All thought her worthy of the happy lot Dame Fortune had cast her life in, as the only daughter of a wealthy southern merchant, and the petted sister of two most promising young men.

To say that she was lovely comprises vastly more than beauty of form and face; for, to be that, requires a pure, attractive soul and a quick, bright mind, radiating from the beautifully-turned features and clear, smooth, complexion. Yet Ellen Tresdon was supremely lovely. The home of the Tresdons was so inviting, with its Turkish carpets, luxurious seats, pictures, paintings, statues, statuettes, and artistic ornaments, presented to you so naturally and easily by the graceful hospitality of its inmates, that few crossed its threshold without seeking it again and again.

Of this interesting family Ellen was the pet and darling, while Charles was the honor and pride—not that the youngest failed to come in for fully his share of love, but he was a mere boy, while Charles was the first born, the child of the bridal year, the link along which father and mother loved to be borne backward to the times when the honeymoon was a soft, tender, beautiful crescent arching their young lives—a honeymoon which was taking all the days of their limited lives to fill up. Aye, proudly they loved him, and well they might, for he was all that ardent love and youthful freshness might be supposed to endow an offspring with. To Ellen he was an idol with whom, until lately, none had contested for the supremacy of her love. God has not made woman to live alone, or man either, as to that; her being is incomplete, and needs to be merged into a stronger, grander life, and marriage alone produces, by the twain united, a perfect humanity. Recently these thoughts had been stealing through the secret chamber of Ellen's soul, and with them the manly form of Edwin Mott entered within its sacred inclosure, and the finest chords of her heart had vibrated thrillingly to his touch.

The first draught of love to a woman's soul is a nectar of new life! an elixir awakening every fiber of her being into ecstany. And as Ellen stood before a full-length mirror, where she had paused to glance over the completeness of her toilet, Charles raised his eyes from his book, and beholding in the face of his pet an exquisite beauty, outrivaling even herself he cast the book away and stepped to her side. As Ellen's arm glided about his waist, the glowing color suddenly receded from her cheek, the head started from his shoulder, and the beautiful eyes took on a tender look of reproof.

"Oh! Charles, is it possible that you carry concealed arms? What need can my brother have for such deadly weapons?"

A slight flush came into the young man's face before the first reproving look those gentle eyes ever gave him, but he attempted to parry the direct question by light speech and laughing rejoinder.

"Why, pet, you would not have me less cautious for my very precious life than other men. You must know that I value it more highly if my sweet sister does not."

With these light words Charles tried to hush an answer with playful kisses, but Ellen would not.

"Brother, you must at least listen to me. This thing is too important, may lead to too serious results. Remember, when you had that dispute with David Hodge you afterward said that it was well you were not armed, for had you been you would have killed him instead of soundly whipping him, as you did. Oh! Charles, how different life would be to us all; what a black pall would rest upon the house that through years had gladly resounded to your light, free step. Think what an inward shudder would creep into my soul as I clasped the hand of blood. Oh, brother, put those weapons away and leave God to care for the life he has given, and even if it come to the worst, dear as you are to me, I would rather have you take death than human life.

"True, most persons would call this an ultra view, but I cannot forget the anathemas of Jehovah against him who takes human life; and I would prefer you to enter the presence of God slain than the slayer. Murder—what a black fiendish deed it is, yet the best men perpetrate it under passion's maddening power. Oh! brother, put those arms away. To me the carrying of them smacks rather of cowardice than bravery. Granted, according to your ideas, that there may arise occasions when a weapon is necessary to defend one's life, yet surely the instances are rare in the life of a man who is just, honorable and courteous with his fellow-men, and it seems to me that true bravery would prefer to take so light a risk to thus branding itself with such evidences of fear."

Charles had never been dictated to by his little pet—nay, scarcely advised. To her he had ever seemed too nearly perfect to need it; and now, although to appease her fears, he took the weapon from his person and laid it aside, it was to be resumed in the quiet of his room ere going upon the street.

Three evenings after this, that house so blessed, so happy, so sought after for years, was closed and darkened. The black pall had fallen upon it; and though the two old people bore up for the sake of their boy, that none might say that they condemned him, the steel was rankling in their hearts, and sore affliction filled them for their only daughter, who lay raving in wild delirium, a burning fever scorching out life's vitality. Oh, what a change! Their noble boy—their pride and hope—a murderer and a refugee from justice and their idolized daughter at the gate of death.

Charles Tresden and Helwin Mott, after a gay evening, with more than a usual amount of wine coursing through their veins and mounting to their heads, quarreled over a trifle; words became hot and insulting; and Charles, mad with wine and hot words, drew and fired, and Mott, his companion and friend, fell dead at his feet—fell dead without a weapon about him—without having raised his hand against him.

An hour afterward Charles, pale and haggard, announced his deadly crime to Ellen, and she sank lifeless before him. He knew not then that a terrible blight, other than his crime, had entered her soul. She had just decided to confide all to him, and sat waiting his coming to share her great happiness with him, when his pale, haggard face startled her from her sweet reverie to hear the curse upon her house and feel the double curse upon her heart. Years have passed since, but Ellen has never breathed her double grief to Charles, and by her request her parents have been silent as to the revelations of delirium. The old people did not long survive the terrible shock. At their death Ellen crossed the ocean, and now she and Charles live in a foreign land, and though their heads are silvered by time, neither has ever thought of leaving the other, and the Italians say never were two such seen; so tender, so gentle and loving to each other, so inseparable, yet so evidently saddened by some terrible loss, and never seeking others, yet ever, when met, gently courteous. All honor and love them, yet the two are so evidently knit together by some great grief that they seem sufficient for each other, and none intrude. The foreigner knows not that the sister dares not leave the brother alone with his remorse and grief. Oh, surely, murder is a dreadful thing, and carrying concealed weapons a dangerous custom.

Died of Fright.

Shelbyville Republican.

The last week of October Lottie Stroup, daughter of Peter Stroup, of Hendricks township, went with a number of other young people to a dance at the residence of Hugh Brannan. During the evening a row was indulged in and John Brant, a cousin of Miss Stroup, got into a fight outside of the house. Some one reported to Miss Stroup that her cousin was killed. She ran to where he was, when he turned to her with a face badly bruised and bleeding; the sight threw her into a spasm from which she did not recover until the next day. From that time she has laid in a semi-unconscious condition, having spasm after spasm until Monday death came to her relief, just forty days from the time of her fright. She was buried on Tuesday at the Second Mt. Pleasant church.

Rifle-Shooting.

California Advertiser.

Prince Otto, the boy chief of the Nez Perce the protege of Capt. McDonald, and without exception, the most wonderful rifle-shot in the world gave an exhibition of rifle-shooting at Platt's Hall that was far superior to the best work ever done by Carver or Dr, Ruth. The audience was select, and included several English, French, Russian and Italian officers, and every one present was satisfied, at the close of the exhibition, that they had witnessed the most wonderful feats ever performed with a rifle.

After going through a manual of arms that would puzzle the oldest militia general in the Union, Otto commenced shooting.

A framework was built upon the stage, within which were a number of swinging glass balls. Upon the rear plankment was suspended the figure of a man life size. A five-cent piece was placed upon the top of the head of this figure. Otto's back being turned to the object, the word "about" was given, and the coin was pierced through the cente.

He then put down his rifle six feet from where he stood, turned a somersault, caught his rifle again, fired, and cut the string of the suspended figure at which he had previously fired.

A pistol barrel was then placed in a small steel frame; behind this was fixed a razor with the edge facing the audience. On each side of this razor was a glass ball securely placed. The pistol barrel, razor and balls were masked with a covering of white cloth. The boy was then blindfolded and his back turned to the object. The "about face" was given, when he fired down through the pistol barrel, split his single rifle ball upon the razor's edge, and broke both glass balls on the right and left. This remarkable feat was performed by the boy's sense of location.

Then a loaded pistol was placed diagonally from where Otto stood. Three balls were yet swinging in opposite directions. Otto fired, hit the trigger of the pistols, and broke the three balls.

Eight metal balls were then screwed on the 10-foot frame. On the sides below and above balls were set swinging in every direction. McDonald stood in front of the boy, who fired over his head, and at each side of him, and between his knees, breaking the balls from any and every part where they were suspended behind McDonald's back. A target was then put up behind McDonald's back. The boy went through the same performance, standing opposite McDonald and rang the bell (which is placed at the extreme rear) at every shot by caroming on the metal balls.

Six small lighted tapers were then arranged upon a slender perpendicular pole; then, while in various postures of vaulting and tumbling, Otto extinguished each respective light with his rifle. Glass balls were thrown up in the air in every conceivable direction. These Otto broke promiscuously without any sight at all, for a large business card was fastened over the point of his rifle.

This description of shooting he considers the most simple, and though wonderful to the spectator, scarcely worthy his own prowness. Otto's average in this class of shooting is 98 out of 100. Otto placed his weapon at a point distant six feet from him; then at the word "ready," two glass balls were thrown in the air. He tumbled, caught his rifle, fired, and broke both of these balls with one shot.

Twelve glass balls were placed upon a perpendicular pole in exact rotation. Otto loaded, fired and broke every one of them in twelve seconds. Otto's favorite weapon is the Winchester rifle, one of which, as a token of admiration was presented to him by the Winchester Rifle Company. To close the performance, Otto, while his left arm was securely tied to his side, loaded, aimed, fired, and broke a large number of glass balls with his right arm.

Shooting Sap-Suckers.

Maurice Thompson in St. Nicholas.

Several of the smaller American wood-peckers are sap drinkers; but only one kind ever pecks holes for the purpose of getting at the sap. He is named by naturalists Centurus Carolinus. He is a very cunning bird. One of his habits is to move around the bole of a tree just fast enough to keep nearly hid from you as you walk around trying to get a good look at him. This he will continue to do for a considerable length of time, but, finally getting the tree trunk fairly between you and him, he takes to his gay wings and flies in such a line as to keep hidden from your eyes. Usually he says good-bye with a keen squeal as he starts away. Down in the mountain valleys of Northern Georgia I used to amuse myself with watching the little half-naked negro boys trying to shoot sap-suckers with their blow guns. Such a blow gun as they had is a straight reed or cane about six feet long, through the whole length of which a smooth bore is made by cutting out the joints. The arrow used in this gun is made of a sharp piece of cane wood not longer or larger than a knitting needle, with a ball of cotton lint bound to the end opposite the point. The arrow is blown out of the gun by the breath from the shooter's mouth. It flies with so great force that I have seen a bird killed at a distance of forty yards. Some of the little negro boys were skillful in using the blow-gun, and as sly as cats in creeping up close to a bird before shooting it. In our Northern States, when the winter is very cold, and all the maples and ash and hickory trees are frozen so that their sap will not flow into our bird's pots, the sap suckers is compelled to depend upon the cedar trees for food, since their resinous sap is not affected by the cold. Often I have seen him pecking away at the gnarled bole of the evergreen when the themometer stood ten degrees below zero, and the air was fairly blue with winter's breath. Even in Georgia it is sometimes so cold that he chooses the pine trees, finding between their bark and the underlying wood a sort of diluted turpentine, upon which he feeds. While busily engaged in pecking his holes on cold, windy days, he is not so watchful as in fine weather. At such times I have seen a little negro "blow gunner" stick three or four arrows into the soft bark around the busy bird before it would fly, and have been just as much surprised at the boy as at the bird; because, if it was strange how the bird could be so busy as not to notice an arrow "chucking" into the tree close by him, it was equally strange how that little negro could "stand it" to be out so long in such a cold, raw wind with nothing on but a shirt.

Public Charity.

Detroit Free Press.

"I hold heah in my han'," began Brother Gardner as the triangle sounded and Samuel Shin laid aside his harmonican, "I hold heah a letter from one of de charitable societies of Detroit axin' if dis club kin be depended on to aid in de good work dis winter. In sartin cases dis club kin be depended on fur a ton of coal, a cord of wood, a bar'l of flour or a $10 bill. In sartin odder cases dis club won't cum down wid as much as a shingle-nail. Public charity in dis kentry am a curus thing."

"It insists dat every man shall airn his own libbin', an' den it turns in an supports de class who will starve sooner dan work."

"It flatters de man who gits a few dollars ahead, an' yet demands a sheer of dat money to aid de idle an' dissipated.

"Public charity comes as near bein' a boldfaced fraud as any sentiment you kin name. It encourages laziness by providin' fur de lazy. It encourages drunkenness by providin' for de families of drunkards. It encourages immorality by providin' homes an' hospitals for de immoral. It encourages de spendthrift by feedin' and clothin' him all winter arter he has squandered his money all summer. Public charity am a wall agin which de reckless, de lazy, de shiftless an' de dissolute lean when all odder props give way.

"Simmer it down, and public charity means takin' de money which a man has saved by hard work an' economy an' usin' it to support de man who has squandered time an' money wilout car' as to what became of him. It am blackmail on industry—it am a slap at economy—it am a kick at industry. How does it come dat wid dis kentry constantly growin' in wealth, and constantly furnishing increased chances for poo' men to get along, dat pauperism am also increasin'? Eight-tenths of de saloons in America am supported by men whose families need ebery cent dey airn fur clothin' and bread, an' who rely on public charity in case of a hard winter. De kentry has five times as many paupers as it had fifteen y'ars ago! Why? Kase we raise five times as much money to support 'em. Double de amount of the poo' fund, an' you will double de number of paupers.

"An' now let me ask you a plain question. If I works hard week in an' week out—if my wife works hard an' economizes—if we patch, darn, dye an' cut ober—if we buy cheap tea an' coffee an' pare de 'taters close, an' manage to pay for a little home, an' put money in de bank for sickness or death, has any human bein' a right to ask me to give one penny to a man who has thrown away scores of dollars for beer an' tobacco—who plays keerds an' shakes dice fur money—who works only when he feels like it—who neber dreams of economy—who neber practices self-denial? I reckon not! Let us now turn our [illegible] de roween of bizness."

TUTT'S
EXPECTORANT
Is composed of Herbal and Mucilaginous products, which permeate the substance of the Lungs, expectorates the acrid matter that collects in the Bronchial Tubes, and forms a soothing coating, which relieves the irritation that causes the cough. It cleanses the lungs of all impurities, strengthens them when enfeebled by disease, invigorates the circulation of the blood, and braces the nervous system. Slight colds often end in consumption. It is dangerous to neglect them. Apply the remedy promptly. A test of twenty years warrants the assertion that no remedy has ever been found that is as prompt in its effects as TUTT'S EXPECTORANT. A single dose raises the phlegm, subdues inflammation, and its use speedily cures the most obstinate cough. A pleasant cordial, children take it readily. For Croup it is invaluable and should be in every family.
In 25c. and $1 Bottles.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR
BAD BREATH!
Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.
PILES!
How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR is no drastic violent purge, but a gentle assistant to nature.
CONSTIPATION!
Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.
SICK HEADACHE!
This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY
BY YEARS OF USE!
A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, via: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Glands that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Pastille is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.
Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

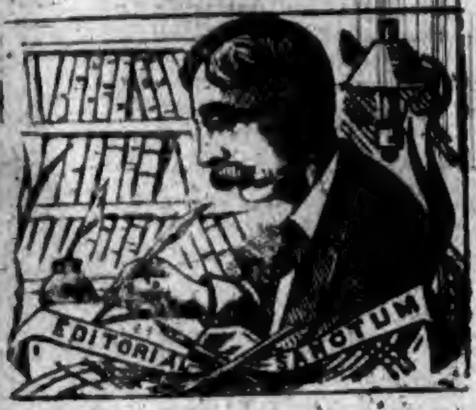
KING'S MAGIC [illegible]

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, DEC. 28th, 1882

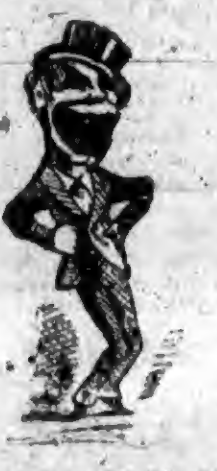
THE COUNTRY EDITOR.

A Comedy in Several Acts.

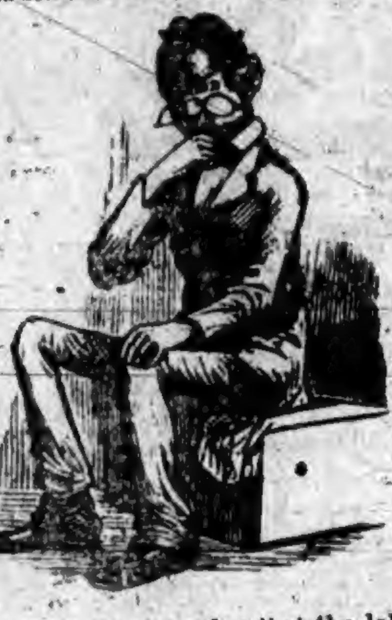


"The editor sat in his sanctum,
His countenance furrowed with care,

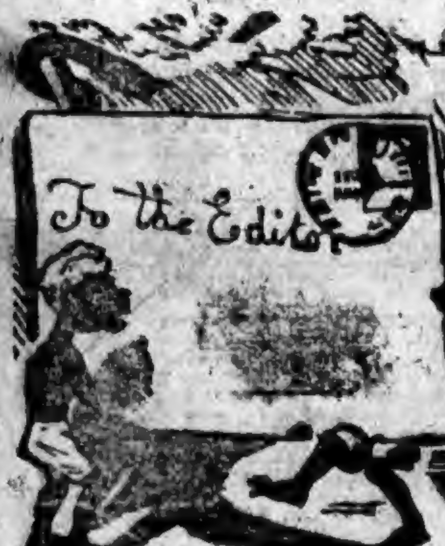
When all at once



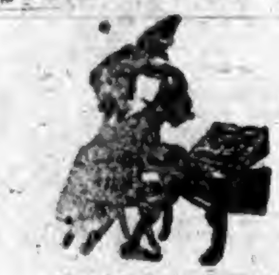
an idea strikes him. He'll go a fishing.



Happens to remember that the lake is frozen over and stops to consider.



When a message is brought in by two intelligent contrabands, inviting him to visit a friend in the country during the holidays. Gets ready.



Has his hair dressed.

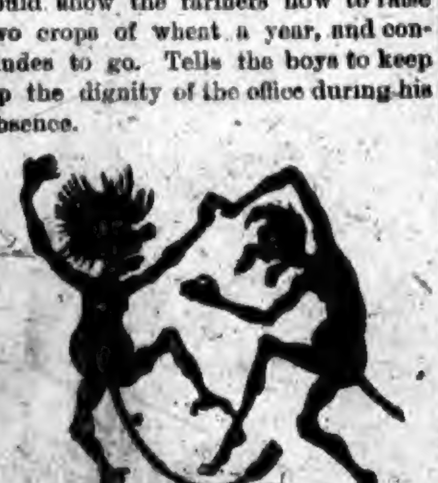
And thinks he could show the farmers how to raise two crops of wheat a year, and concludes to go. Tells the boys to keep up the dignity of the office during his absence.



They keep it up.

He gets ready and hitches up in a hurry.

He mounts; he flies,
Straight to the land of pumpkin pies.

Reaches the country in safety, and meets a long lost friend. His friend is at home. Finds a farmer's life is full of hard labor. Takes a rest and then starts off rabbit hunting. Gets a nice fat one and brings it home in triumph. Takes another rest and then concludes he would be delighted with the romance of feeding stock. Takes an ear of corn and finds it not so romantic. Thinks farmers ought not to allow their stock to be idle so much of the time. So he invents a mowing machine and starts to the meadow. Don't succeed very well, but invents another implement with which he goes to gather his hay. He gets tired and starts for home, where his family await him.

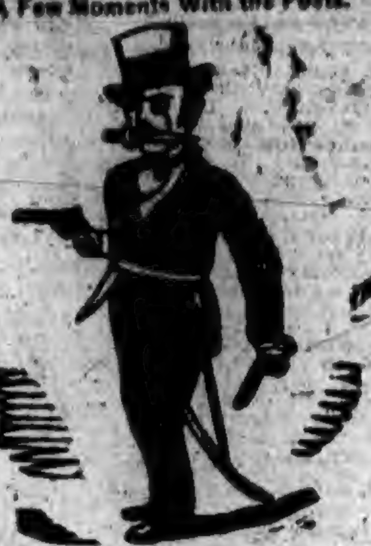
Grand tableau. Home, Sweet Home.

A Few Moments With the Poets.



"Now here is Michael Johnson
From a village in Wisconsin,
Both a gambler and a murderous galout.
To the gin-mill he would stagger
With a lovely, drunken swagger,
And a liver-slicing dagger in his boot.
He was ever, ever cheating,
All the others badly beating,
Raking in their filthy shekels with delight.
He was always pining, starving
For some shooting and some carving
For he gloried in a sanguinary fight."

"Then Christmas toys,
These Christmas boys,
And eke each girlish elf;
But, then, had I
My youth again
I'd be a child myself."

"Four jolly fiddlers came from the east;
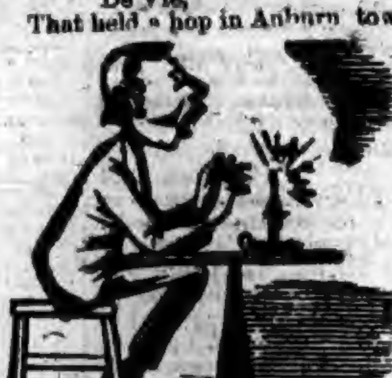
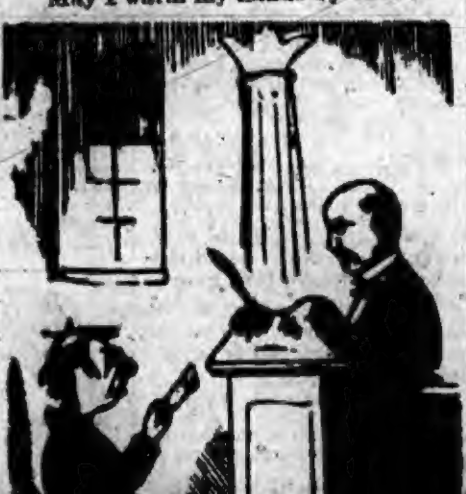
Came out of the east when the sun
went down,
For they were to play for the Joie
De Vie,
That held a hop in Auburn town."



"Hail, holy light,
Offspring of heaven, first born;
Or, of the eternal, co-eternal beam,
May I warm my hands by thee?"



"When I was a school boy aged ten,
Oh! mighty little Greek I knew;
With my short striped trousers and now and then
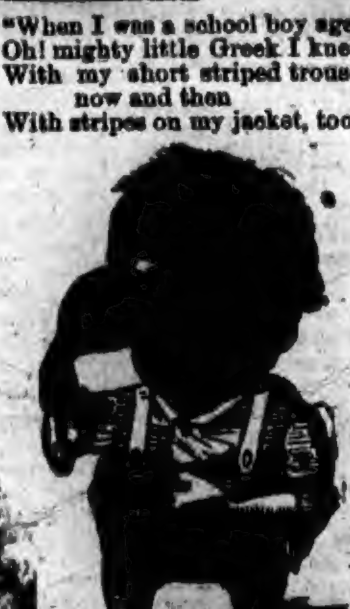
With stripes on my jacket, too."



To the Doctor:
"Pity the sorrows of the poor young man
Whose trembling limbs have borne
him to your door.
He ate his turkey on the Christmas plan;
Oh! give relief and he will bless your store."

"They stood like three graces in the shade
Of the parasol they carried,
And talked as oft doth each little maid
Of the day when they all should be married."

"She was more fair than words could say.
Barefooted came the beggar maid
Before the King Cophetua."

"I come with a few pale flowers
From the scenes that I thought sublime,
And my heart is filled with the music
I have caught from the warbler's chime,
Thanking our Father for flowers and trees—
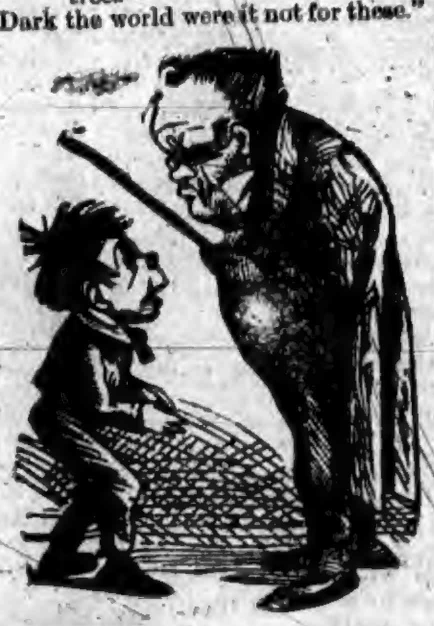
Dark the world were it not for these."



No, father, I can't tell a lie; I did it with my little ax—one of those fine ones they sell at Snyder & Culbertson's.

—Dr. LaRue the only reliable specialist in this country, has located at the Auburn House, Auburn, Ind., until March 1, 1883. tf

—Alfred Weirick, of Fairfield Center keeps a full line of all kinds of goods and at prices as low as in the larger towns. 4t.

Cedar Creek Store.

Call at Holman's and suit yourselves in holiday goods of various kinds and unusual low prices. Nice line of dolls, toys, chinaware, vases and other articles too numerous to mention. Young and old can be suited in holiday goods. We also have fresh oysters by can or dish and a nice line of fresh candies and groceries. Let everybody call on us and see for themselves how cheap they can buy. 51-2t.

Beware of Imitations.

The delicate odor of Floreston Cologne is entirely novel. Look for signature of Hiscox & Co., N. Y., on each bottle. 49-4t.

A Good Foundation.

In American households the prevailing complaints are weakness of the stomach and its consequences, indigestion, nervousness and rheumatism. Such sufferers can lay a good foundation for health by using Parker's Ginger Tonic as it tones up the stomach and nerves, and keeps the kidneys active to carry off their foul matter.—N. O. Picayune. 49-4t

An Impossibility.

Deserving articles are always appreciated. The exceptional cleanliness of Parker's Hair Balsam makes its popular. Gray hairs are impossible with its occasional use. 49-4t.

LOADED, LOADED, LOADED,

With all kinds of Heavy Goods. The continuance of warm weather has placed heavy goods of every description at a discount. People will not buy until a change of weather forces them to do so. This state of affairs forces us to offer

HEAVY SUITS,

Wedding Bells.

F. P. Blair, of Waterloo, at one time one of the publishers of the Courier, was married last Sunday to Miss Sarah Zimmerman, of Wawaka, Ind. The ceremony which was a quiet one, was solmenized at the residence of the brides' parents, and the young couple will soon begin housekeeping for themselves in Waterloo. It gives us great pleasure to know that our former partner has been so fortunate in securing for his life companion, a young lady so worthy and amiable as Miss Zimmerman. We feel sure that neither will ever regret the step so deliberately taken. The liveliest good wishes of the entire Courier force go with them on the new journey they have undertaken.

OBITUARY.

Mary S. Woodcox, was born near Miamisburg, Miami county, Ohio, December 26th 1814, and with her parents moved to Allen couunty, Indiana, in 1830, was there married to Cornlius Woodcox November 5th 1835. Moved to DeKalb county, one mile below Orangeville in the year 1836, on the farm now owned by C. C. Walters, where she lived until seven years ago, moving two years ago on the farm of James Headley, one mile east of Newville. She joined the United Brethren church 37 years ago, and lived a consistent christian life until the end. She was taken sick in May with what every one supposed was quick consumption, but which proves at last to be a tumor in the throat. She suffered untold agony until last Wednesday morning, Dec., 14, when death relieved her, and she passed peacefully away. Her funeral sermon was preached by Rev. Lilley, of Hicksville, Ohio, from a text of her own choosing, 4th chapter 2nd Timothy, 5, 6 and 7 verses. She leaves 3 children and 12 grandchildren to mourn her loss.

OBITUARY.

Daniel Cool, died suddenly at his home in DeKalb county, Ind., Dec. 19, 1882, at the age of 69 years, 11 months and 26 days. Mr. Cool had been going around, about in his usual health until the evening of the day on which he died, when he went out to the barn to do some feeding. Remaining out longer than seemed necessary, Mrs. Cool became somewhat uneasy and went to look after him. He was found lying near the straw stack, but the spark of life had already gone out, thus bringing sudden and unexpected sorrow upon the family. The deceased was born in the state of New York, and after he became 21 years of age emigrated to Erie Co., Ohio, and then to this county, where he continued to reside until death. Mr. Cool was commended for his excellencies as a man; faithful, quiet and peaceful in all his relations as a neighbor, husband, father and friend.

About twenty-five years ago he united with the Lutheran church and since that time endeavored to live for the life beyond this present world. He leaves a companion and six children to lament his departure. Funeral services were held at the Lutheran church in this place, when the remains were solemnly committed to their silent resting place, in Auburn, Ind.

Mr. Samuel B. McCord, 1 McMicken Ave., Indianapolis, says: "Brown's Iron Bitters cured me of billiousness."

—Everyone who had holiday goods did a rushing business Saturday and a great deal has been sold during the week so far. Parents are taking unusual pains to make the little ones happy.

—Dr. J. H. Ford has authorized us to thank the people generally for their assistance in putting out the fire which would have destroyed his farm barn, one day last week.

—We have received the last number of "Wide Awake" one of the neatest and most natural of our many papers gotten up expressly for the little folks. It is published by D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, Mass.

—A number of interesting items were omitted last week owing to the crowded state of our columns. We hope our readers and correspondents will be patient, as we shall do the best we can to have all matter intended for the paper, come out on time.

—We have received a postal from Dr. Chas. B. Allyn to the effect that some of his own raising of oranges will soon reach Auburn. Some will be distributed among his friends here and some will be for sale by Hollister. We shall do justice to our share, Doc.

—L. J. Gengler, of Garrett, called up to see us for a short time last week. He is fully recovered from that shooting accident, although he still carries lead enough to entitle him to a pension. He is still buying poultry of all kinds and pays the highest rates. Mr. Gengler also deals largely in first class oysters, making the "live nations" a specialty.

—Ed. Baker wishes to thank his many friends in Auburn and vicinity for their liberal patronage during the past eight years, and that by attention to business hopes to share their support in the future. He always keeps on hand a supply of fresh baked bread, pies and cakes; also fancy cakes made to order. Good lunches with hot coffee and oysters by the can, quart or dish. 50-3t. Auburn, Ind.

—We had a pleasant call Monday from W. L. Lontzenhiser and Stephen VanBuren of East Toledo. W. L. was here visiting friends, and his parents at Waterloo. He returned on Tuesday. He and his friend are both members of the well known Toledo light artilery, known also as the 4th Ohio national guard, and are under the command of Capt. O. J. Hopkins, who will be remembered by the old soldiers of this county, as he has been at several reunions. He was also a member of Garfield's old regiment.

—Married:—At the residence of the brides' parents, in Concord township, on Saturday Dec., 24, 1882, Mr. Samuel Schoup of Richland township, to Miss Rebecca Foltz, youngest daughter of Samuel Foltz. Rev. Baker, of the Lutheran church in Spencerville, officiated. The occasion was made all the more pleasant by a family reunion of Mr. Foltz's children. These were ex-surveyor Foltz and family, and in all seven children and ten grandchildren besides many others of the relatives.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BUTLER.

Daniel Stewart, a Wabash engineer, died very suddenly last Saturday night. Deceased was down town on Saturday and seemed to be in good health. He leaves a wife and three children. His funeral took place on Monday.... Large crowds assembled at all the churches on Saturday night's Christmas occasion.... C. H. Crane has opened up his new grocery. But little over a month ago its site was a vacant lot—now a new, two story, double brick building fills the place.... W. L. Blair visited St. Louis recently in the interest of Butler and the Wabash.... Our schools are closed for a week's vacation.... Irene Campbell and Jennie McIntyre Sundayed in Detroit.... Our grist mill is crowded to its utmost capacity.... Jonathan Bourdner, operating a mill at Mt. Jelice, was in town Sunday.... Mrs. J. Wium is visiting in Toledo.... Searight's drum damper business is being pushed with the united efforts of some eight busy merchants.

ST. JOE.

J. Howery, of Bryan, Ohio, stopped over a few days last week with his brother David.... Prof. Bell made a journey over to the county seat Thursday last—the grand jury called.... A goodly number of St. Joe people waited on the grand jury last week. We think that if three more of our saloon going population would have had an invitation perhaps some good might have been done.... C. C. Walters reports his father, who resides in Jackson township, as very sick with little prospects of recovery.... Married Dec. 17th, at the residence of the bride's father, E. J. Boyle, Joseph Baker and Jane Boyle.... Joseph Schlatter is proud over the advent of a visitor at his home. It's a girl of usual weight. ....The I. O. O. F. Lodge of this place is one of the things of the past.... "Behold how good and how lovely it is for man and woman to dwell together." So thought Joseph Hull and Ella Baker, and they are now journeying down the hill together.... While at Newville the other day we dropped into the store of Walt. Cheeseman and were surprised at the business Walter is doing.

SPENCERVILLE.

Compliments of the season to our readers.... Some of our young bloods while out hunting for a Christmas tree stopped at Mr. Foltz's and got a hot lunch of bread and pepper. They did not have on the "wedding garments" and were cast out into utter darkness where there was wailing and gnashing of teeth, especially on eating the hot pepper Miss Louisa fixed for them.... Gerry Emanuel will go to Fort Wayne to attend the medical college.... Quite a serious difficulty arose in Barney's store between Martin Wagon and Ben Wassom, erminating in an affray, the latter drawing a knife.... The Lutheran Sunday-school had a Christmas tree on Sunday night. The tree was a success. Among the many Christmas gifts was a beautiful gold headed cane of which Dr. Emanuel was the lucky recipient. It was presented on Christmas by his four sons Charles, Hamilton, Cicero and Gerry, each having his name engraved in gold. On the top was engraved, "Dr. Emanuel Christmas, 1882." The body of the cane is beautifully polished ebony, and the doctor is very proud of his present as well as of his dutiful sons.... The Spencerville Silver Cornet Band are making arrangements for an exhibition which we predict will be a success. We will advise the readers of the Courier of the date in good time.

WATERLOO.

J. B. Taylor and family spent Christmas in Auburn, visiting their daughter, Mrs. Rob. Donaldson.... Miss Carrie Morell, Miss Fannie Clark and Miss Ola Leib will receive calls on New Years from 2 till 7 p. m. at the residence of O. T. Clark. We hope the young gentlemen will appreciate the opportunity thus offered to pass a part of the afternoon so pleasantly.... F. P. Blair was married last Sunday to Miss Sarah Zimmerman, of Wawaka.... The annual election of officers for the Agricultural Society takes place here on Thursday of this week.... Sam Beck is still buying all the poultry he can get. ....Miss Jesse Espy and Miss Carrie Smith, of Auburn, Sundayed in Waterloo, the latter as a guest in the family of Gen. L. J. Blair.... Miss Frank Clark, who was at one time a teacher in the schools here, spent a part of last week visiting friends here. She also made a visit with the family of B. B. Long, in Wilmington township. ....The Ann Arbor boys are all home for the holidays.... Loewenstein & Rothschild presented each of the ministers with a turkey for Christmas.... May Shoemaker has friends spending the holidays with her.... J. Kahn, of Chicago, was in town a couple of days last week.... B. L. Du can talks of going west soon to look for a location. ....Prof. Harrison went to his home in Ohio, to spend the holidays.... Dell Locke is home from Toledo for his vacation.... Will Patterson is at home for a few day's rest.... The Christmas entertainments at the different churches were well attended.... J. D. McAnally has got settled in his new home.... Ed. and Frank Long assisted at Willis' during the holiday trade.... Miss Emma Beck will receive New Years calls with Miss May Homer, from 3 p. m. till 8. ....Herman Hirsh was in town Tuesday on his way home from Auburn.... Mrs. Ed. Long and daughter Mamie are spending a few days in town, the guests of her sister, Mrs. F. W. Willis. ....Mrs. C. A. O. McClellan spent Christmas with her friends here.... M. W. Johnson is resting from his labors this week and is at home.... E. T. Brysland came home to spend Christmas.... O. T. Clark made a dinner party for his Sunday-school class on Christmas, and the boys seem to appreciate the kindness.... The families of Dr. Chamberlain and A. S. Leas had a Christmas tree of their own.... Henry Shoemaker, who has been spending a few weeks in Michigan, returned last Saturday.

Don't give up and say there is no help for Catarrh, hay fever and cold in head, since thousands testify that Elys' Cream Balm has entirely cured them. Price 50 cents. Apply into nostrils with little finger. 52-2t.

Moody for Speaker.

We nominate Hon. D. D. Moody for speaker of the next house of representatives. He has made a good record in that body already, and has fully learned his duties and the parliamentary rules necessary for conducting its meetings. He is well known for his clear head, promptness and decision, just the qualities necessary for the position. He is a good debater and a ready and rapid thinker. But there are other qualities that recommend him to the people of his county. He has just made one of the most energetic and brilliant campaigns seen in this part of the state. Against the most bitter and persistent opposition from the opposite party, and even from a part of his own party, he entered upon his canvass with a determination and vim as rare as it was admirable. He made a thorough canvass of the county, and by his ability and earnestness he convinced many of his opponents of their error, and disarmed opposition in his own party. And in all the heat of the strife no ungentlemanly words were heard from his lips, but he came out of the canvass with more friends than when he entered it. He fought a good fight. He has won, and we believe express the feelings of all his democratic constituents when we say he has earned promotion, so we nominate him for the speakership. Let Northern Indiana stand by him and put him there.

—The Peoples Advocate at Angola says: "D. D. Moody, representative elect for DeKalb County, called on us Wednesday. Mr. Moody made a square fight on prohibition and was elected as he deserved to be. We all like a man that has the nerve to face an issue squarely." .... "Mr. Moody's prospects for the speakership of the next house seems to brighten daily. The position is justly due Northern Indiana."

—The Kendallville News: "Hon. D. D. Moody, candidate for speaker is attracting considerable attention, and he stands to-day very prominent for that position. He seems to be the only man proposed from the northern part of the state, and his qualifications and ability are freely admitted by his associates in the house two years ago, and his friends generally.

—From the Logansport Pharos: Representative Moody, of DeKalb County, will be a candidate for Speaker of the House. Mr. Moody was a member of the last legislature, and has the ability to preside over the deliberations of that body in an able manner. Heretofore the Speakership has gone to the central or southern part of the state. As Mr. Moody is the only candidate from the northern portion of the state, northern members would certainly be justified in supporting him for the position.

—In a letter from Hot Springs, Ark., T. C. Mays, a former leading democrat of northern Indiana, says: "I was particularly glad to see Mr. Moody win the laurels he so clearly deserved. I regard his race the strongest, best conducted campaign of all the local contests in the state. He had enemies to contend with, who should have been his friends, but he stands forth with a handsome majority as the complete vindication of his course. I happen to know Moody's career while representative before, and I know a more honest, energetic, faithful servant can not be found. He is a man of great earnestness and perseverance, and will always be found at the post of duty. Now, I have a suggestion to make—an idea that has come to me with great force and I hope the north part of the state will second the motion—and that is that Mr. Moody ought to be Speaker of the next House of Representatives. The north part of the state has not been represented in that position for a long time. Mr. Moody's race—almost a phenomenal one—will justly win the support of every one, pleasant address and former experience should place him way ahead in the race. Affluent, ready speaker, a scholarly student—with a magnificent private character—there is not a democrat in the state but who could cordially support him. His great firmness and unswerving fidelity the good old party, whether in the smoke of defeat or in the hour of triumph, fit him especially for this, and I would like to see the whole north part of the state take it up and pass it along until, gathering force, as it surely will, it will place him in the speaker's chair. It depends upon the firmness of members elect in that part of the state as to whether they shall have their own. Let an organized effort be made among his friends everywhere, and especially in the adjoining counties, and it will form the nucleus to an irresistable tide that shall roll to victory. His friends at home can do him much good by their individual efforts. I wish I could add my humble efforts in person, for I am satisfied that with his claims and qualifications he could easily be elected."

—The Plymouth Democrat has the following: "Hon. D. D. Moody, of DeKalb county, is announced as a candidate for Speaker of the House of Representatives. Mr. Moody is a rising young man, and having served in two sessions of the General Assembly with a considerable degree of credit to himself, it may with reason be conjectured that, if elected, he would make an acceptable presiding officer."

—The Goshen Democrat has the following hearty tribute: "D. D. Moody, of DeKalb county, is mentioned as a candidate for speaker of the next house of representatives. From all that we know of Mr. Moody, we should say that the selection would be an excellent one. His record of the last House is A No. 1, and his qualifications for the position are pronounced first-class. It seems to be difficult for anyone living as far north as DeKalb county to secure any favors at the Capitol, but we hope Mr. Moody may prove an exception to the rule. At all events we bespeak for him the active support of all democratic members from this end of the state.

—We find the following in a recent number of the Corunna Head Light: "D. D. Moody has been favorably mentioned by the democratic press in connection with the Speakership of the next House. Mr. Moody is a rising young statesman, of budding genius, and a democratic stalwart to the backbone. He has already made a shining mark on the floor of the General Assembly, and if chosen to preside over the deliberations of that body, he will prove himself a Roman of the line. As DeKalb county is very modest in her aspirations respecting a recognition of native talent we trust that the claims of our representative will receive due consideration."

—The candidacy of Hon. D. D. Moody for the Speakership of the House of Representatives is generally endorsed by the democratic press of Northern Indiana. Mr. Moody made a gallant race for re election and achieved what, under all circumstances, may be justly regarded a brilliant victory. As a representative of the young Democracy he occupies not only a prominent but also a proud position on the floor, his services in the House will fully attest the wisdom of his constituency in honoring him with a second term."—[Ligonier Banner.

—The Fort Wayne Sentinel: "For Speaker of the next House D. D. Moody is prominently mentioned. Mr. Moody is one of the most earnest, active and industrious men in the state and did excellent service for the party in the campaign. He is a quick, read man, well posted in parliamentary circles, finely educated, has a fine address and would be an honor to the state if the House should elect him."

—The Lutheran church at No. 16, in Richland township, had a nice christmas tree Monday evening. Rev. Kelso and his son-in-law, Mr. Bonebrake attended from this place.

—The children of the Presbyterian Sunday-school, not being able to take the sleigh ride to Waterloo, had a nice little treat in the basement of the church instead. The occasion was taken to present the pastor, Mr. McCord with a nice pair of gold mounted spectacles.

—Charley Voss and Will Hornberger, who have been working at South Bend for some time called on us Monday in company with Doc Till, of Waterloo. Voss is working for the Birdsall manufacturing company and Hornberger for the Singer machine folks. Both are looking as if South Bend agreed with them.

Many persons in Pittston and vicinity are using Elys' Cream Balm, a catarrh remedy, with most satisfactory results. A lady down town is recovering the sense of smell which she had not enjoyed for fifteen years. She had given up her case as incurable. Mr. Barber, the druggist, has used it in his family and commends it very highly. A young Tunkhannock lawyer known to many of our readers, testifies that he was cured of partial deafness.—Pittston, Pennsylvania Gazette, Aug. 15, 1879. 52-2t.

Do not be Deceived.

In these times of quack medicine advertisements everywhere, it is truly gratifying to find one remedy that is worthy of praise and which really does as recommended. Electric Bitters will do as recommended. They invariably cure stomach and liver complaints, disease of the Kidneys and urinary difficulties. We know whereof we speak, and can readily say, give them a trial. Sold at fifty cents a bottle at F. E. Davenport's.

—We had a pleasant visit from Mrs. Joseph Trut and Mrs. H. L. Sheets on Monday. They were accompanied by Misses Ella, Mary and Mina Mitchell, daughters of our townsman Jacob Mitchell.

No one whose blood is impure can feel well. There is a weary, languid feeling, and often a sense of discouragement and despondency. Persons having this feeling of lassitude and depression, should take Ayer's Sarsaparilla to purify and vitalize the blood.

The North American Review for January opens with a symposium in which three of the most prominent advocates in this country of the "Revision of Church Creeds," namely Rev. Dr. Newman Smith, Rev. Henry Ward Beecher and Rev. D. Lyman Abbott, sent forth the grounds upon which such revision is deemed necessary as a defense of revealed religion against the encroachments of skepticism, and as an adjustment of the relations between faith and science. "University Education for Women," a question that just now is being warmly agitated both here and in England, is discussed by Prof. W. Le Conte Stevens, who, though he zealously advocates the measure, commands the attention and respect of its opponents by the enmity fairness with which he states the adverse arguments. Prof. Isaac L. Rice gives a "Definition of Liberty," deduced from a profoundly philosophical study of the phases of political evolution, from the earliest Anglo-Saxon times, to the present day. "American English," by Gilbert M. Tucker, is a spirited defense of our cis-Atlantic fashion of English speech against the aspersions of sundry British critics. The Rev. Dr. H. W. Thomas writes an article that can hardly fail to strike a sympathetic chord in many a mind, on "The Responsibilities of Progressive Thinkers." "Bigotry in the Medical Profession," by Dr. David Hart, is a protest, from the pen of a respected member of the medical profession, against the first commandment of medical ethics, which forbids association with any but regular practioners. Finally, Charles T. Congdon, under the singularity apt title of "Adulteration of Intelligence," exposes some of the grave evils to be apprehended from the monopolization of telegraph lines, press associations and influential public journals. Suicide statistics in New York City for twelve years are given by the New York Tribune. In that time they numbered 326 men and 361 women. Poison was the method for 540 persons, and hanging for 272. There were 701 Germans who destroyed themselves, and only 241 Irishmen.

The parties accused of the outrage on Miss Bond at Taylorville, were granted a change of venue to the Montgomery County Circuit, thus postponing the trial until the 2d of April next. There are no hopes of the permanent recovery of the victim, and fears are expressed that the case will never come to trial.

One of the most wonderful feats performed by the telephone was over the Western Union Telegraph company's lines a few days since, when conversation was carried on between President W. B. Strong, of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad in Boston, and General Manager C. C. Wheeler, in Guaymas. The distance was 3,500 miles. The conversations were heard in a feeble tone, but they were very distinct.

Jay Gould, in his evidence before the committee of the New York State Senate investigating "corners," said corners give the producers better prices and make large markets. Speculation benefits the home dealers, brings money to the country, and creates markets all over the world. Mr. Gould said he had spent large sums in aiding immigration. A panic was caused, he said, when men lose their balance, and rush to sell.

As consolidation and monopoly seem to be the leading ideas of the times in the management of capital, labor will be compelled to adopt union and co-operation for self-protection. The power of capital combined in monopolies can be subdued and controlled by the co-operation of labor, but the ideas of this latter power are yet in the infancy of their development, while the ideas of combined capital are full-formed and vigorous.

Mr. Edison said to a reporter in Boston recently: "The largest undertaking we have on hand now is to carry 15,000 horse-power of electricity eighteen miles into the City of Mexico, for the purpose of lighting that city and furnishing power for various purposes. We are only making estimates as yet. This thing of carrying power from water falls to a considerable distance is going to be done very extensively in the future. It is practicable to carrry 25,000 horse-power twenty miles if necessary."

A specimen of a "How not to do it" success is shown in a report from Washington which says that the Franco-American Claims Commission has been at work nearly two years, has cost the respective governments some $800,000, and during its existance has passed on claims to the amount of $14,000—the entire amount of the claims involved being some $25,000,000. Commenting on this report an exchange says: "One can easily figure from these data how long it will take to pass on the entire amount of claims, and how much it will cost this country and France to have the matters at issue settled. The time required will be 900 years, and the expense of the operation will be to the two countries $225,000,000, not counting the $25,000,000 which is at stake."

Important and encouraging statistics are collated by the Indianapolis Journal as follows: "From the reports from 31 counties, the State Bureau of Statistics finds that there has been a reduction of the mortgage indebtedness on real estate during the last year of $600,000. The counties embraced represent about one fourth of the State, and will give a proportionate average for the entire State. Reports from the same counties show that the consideration in transfers of real estate amounted in the aggregate to something over $9,100,000. One of the most significant statistical items which the bureau has has produced during the year is compiled from the reports of 28 counties, showing an increase during the last year in the number of owners of real estate of 8,649. The counties reporting are generally widely separated, and will represent a fair average for the entire State, indicating a very remarkable improvement in the prosperity of the people and a most extraordinary increase in the free-holding citizenship."

The Chicago Tribune has interviewed a large number of business men of that city on the question of a higher license for saloons, and finds them unanimous in favor of such policy. It says: "With one accord they pronounced in favor of high license, the most acceptable figure being $500 per annum. This would serve the double purpose of giving the city a large increase of revenue and of running the low doggeries and cheap gin-mills out of existence. Four thousand saloons is too liberal an allowance for a city of 600,000 people.", Allowing an average of $25 as the daily receipts of the saloons, which is doubtless far below the actual figure—it will be seen that Chicago worse than wastes $100,000 per day, or $36,500,000 per year, through her grogshops. Add to this pecuniary waste, the impairment of vitality and working power in the consumers of all this alcoholic slop, the demoralization and ruin of personal character, the destitution and suffering of women, the privation and enforced ignorance of children, the endless chain of disorder and crime and public burden of resulting taxation, and the picture is one which constitutes a grim satire on our civilization.

Judge Hunter, at Salt Lake City denied a writ of mandamus to oust polygamist officials under the Edmunds law, and great excitement has resulted. The Gentiles assert that Hunter has been purchased by the Mormons, and demand his removal.

Four years ago Ed Cox shot and killed Colonel Robert A Alston, in Decatur, Ga, and was given a life sentence. Alston's son swore that if Cox was pardoned he would kill him. Governor Stevens has pardoned him and he has returned to Decatur. It is likely that young Alston will keep his oath.

Dispatches from all sections of Northeastern Pennsylvania report a serious scarcity of water. Farmers and families are in many instances compelled to go miles to obtain supplies for stock and household purposes. Several collieries have also been compelled to suspend operations on account of the drouth.

A fire in a Suffolk street tenement, at New York, caused great excitement on account of its rapid headway. Three children were thrown from a third-story window and recovered in safety, and two women adopted the same mode of escape.

Three days' continuous rains has caused great floods in Washington Territory and Oregon, mills, houses and bridges, being carried away. The Pendleton river rose so rapidly that dwellers in some districts were forced to take refuge in the trees.

There has been an organization incorporated at Boston, Mass, for the colonization and development of Palestine. The association believes it can be made the center of the world of commerce, as it is now geographically, and proposes to run a line of packets between Boston and its principals ports.

After a protracted meeting of the Irish Privy Council, over which the Lord Lieutenant presided, it was decided to place the city of Dublin under the operation of the curfew clause of the repression act, empowering the arrest of suspicious persons found in the streets between one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise.

Concord, N H and its vicinity were shaken by an earthquake Tuesday evening, its advent being preceded by a sound similar to that produced by an explosion. The people rushed from the swaying buildings into the streets, the concussion in some instances extinguishing the gas. Shocks were also felt at Manchester, Dover, Contocook, Pittsfield, and other towns.

WASHINGTON.

Congressman Davis made a brief speech in the House to-day, opposing an adjournment over the holidays, and sending to the Clerk's desk to be read a telegram from General Rogers, President of the Labor Union in Chicago, asking that the question of the tobacco tax be immediately settled, as it is now paralyzing trade and throwing thousands of men out of employment. Mr. Davis leaves here to-morrow to attend the funeral of Congressman Orth, and will go thence home. He expects to be detained there a large share of the session by his contest, as the law gives each side forty days for taking testimony. He says the fact that this will take him away from his duties is his greatest cause of regret regarding the contest. He further adds that he believes the contest was caused by malcontents in his own party, rather than by Democrats.

The following post-office has been established: Illinois—Sorento, Bond county; Postmaster, A. F. Gwyn. Railway Post-office service has been established in Illinois, from Peoria to Abingdon; also, in Wisconsin, route 25,051, Superior Junction, new office, to Superior. Star service changes: Iowa—Route 27,195, Des Moines to Prairie Hill, from January 1, 1883; curtail service and end at Hatton. Iowa—Route 27,611, Prairie Hill to woodward, from January 1, to June 30, 1883; established.

A circular will be issued to-day suspending the exchange of 3½ per cent. bonds into 3's from December 30, to February 1, 1883. The interest on the bonds exchanged after February 1, will be adjusted to and from that date.

The Secretary of the Treasury announces that the three months' interest due February 1st next, on bonds embraced in the 119th call, will be paid by checks forwarded to owners, the fractional interest from that date being to February 10, being paid with the principal of the bonds at the time of redemption. The Assistant Treasurer at New York has been instructed to continue the redemption of called and uncalled extended bonds without rebate of interest, but after January 1, he will require a redeposit of the three months' interest due February 1.

The special Mississippi River Committee to-day examined Colonel Hatton, engineer in charge of Baltimore harbor, who accompanied the party on the cruise down the river. The tendency of his testimony was against narrowing the river. He thought it impracticable, and didn't consider the levees of the slightest use to navigation. He thought the outlets would be of great use in carrying off the flood of waters.

The President has nominated John F Olmstead, of the District of Columbia, to be Commissioner of the District.

A bill was introduced in the House, Tuesday, by Mr. Joyce, of Vermont, and in the Senate by Mr. Logan, which requires every telegraph and cable company to receive and forward the business of any other company, whether it relates to the business of the company offering it or otherwise. It also makes it a misdemeanor for any other than the person sending to read and examine the same.

The Mississippi River Committee, Tuesday morning, examined Henry Richardson, State Engineer of Louisiana. He thought levees protected the land from overflow; had never considered them as improving navigation. He thought they might incidentally make an improvement.

The Ways and Means Committee Tuesday fixed the rate on wire rope and iron strand the same as on steel wire of the same gauge, three cents per pound, instead of the same rate as that upon wire of which the rope is made; and the rate on steel, in any form not otherwise provided for, was changed from 3 to 3¼ cents per pound. Copper cement from to 2½@3½ cents per pound. The committee will probably complete metals to-day.

Mr. Bliss, continuing his opening argument, reviewed Brady's action in expediting mails on the route from Rawlins to White river. He then said he had gone over the nineteen routes specified in the indictment, and had stated nothing which would not be proved. There was another ex-Senator, whose evidence he could not promise with certainty to place before the jury. This witness (Spencer) is a fugitive, with an order from court for his arrest. He was concealed, and the government has spent a good deal of money trying to find him. He had recently come east from Chicago. He had appeared in New York, and gone to northern New York with government agents in sharp pursuit. He then jumped into Canada. He was protesting all the while that he could not testify to anything. He believed that Spencer would come to the conclusion that it is better for him to come to Washington, tell the truth, and subject himself to the discipline of the court.

At the close of Bliss's address, the court said he thought twenty-five cents a folio simple compensation for the stenographers, but suggested that the expense be borne equally by both sides. The suggestion was accepted by all.

Professor Newcomb, the naturalist of the Jeannette expedition, referred to a statement of a Russian officer to the effect that the death of Captain DeLong and party was due to the killing of their dogs and their neglect to carry fowling pieces. It was a question of shortage room, and of provisions for either dogs or men. Naturally the men were first considered. As to firearms, I would say that beside the Remington and Winchester rifles, each officer, excepting myself, had a Remington breechloading shotgun, some of them fitted with auxiliary rifle barrels and they more than once shot birds enough for the whole ship's company. Noros said there was no room for all the dogs so we selected ten of the best, and the rest were killed. The ten saved were distributed into the three boats; we could not keep them there They would jump onto the ice and drift off. We would try to coax them back, but it was of no use.

Melville says the Russian officer is talking of something he don't know anything about. He is talking about a country he was never in, and of a land of which he knows nothing.

Infantile Curosity.

Texas Siftings.

The candor of the small boy is occasionally very distressing to his friends and relatives. In the waiting room of the Austin depot, there was a lady with a small boy, and also a benevolent looking old gentleman, who had a very singular protuberance on his nose which attracted the attention of the youth.

"Mister, did God make that round lump on your nose?"

"Hush, Johnny," said his mother."

"I ain't talking to you, ma, I am talking to this man."

"That's a wen on my nose, little boy," remarked the gentleman, pleasantly.

"What did you say?"

"Wen."

"That's what I say, when?"

"What do you mean, little boy?" said the old gentleman, losing patien just a little.

"I want to know when God made that lump? He made the nose first, and then put the lump on it afterwards, didn't he?"

"Keep quiet, Johnny."

"But, ma, I'm not talking to you. God had to make the nose, before he put the lump on it, for if he made the lump first, he would have no place to put it, would he?"

"The nose was made first," replied the old man, who was a miracle of good nature.

"I said so. God made your eyes before he put the lump on your nose, didn't he?"

"Yes."

"Then you saw God put that lump on your nose, didn't you, or did he put it on your nose when you was asleep?"

Here the boy's mother managed to get him under control, but he broke out in a fresh place.

"Are you waiting for the train?"

"Yes, my boy."

"You are not waiting for the train that went off yesterday, are you?"

"No, I am not, sonny."

"I thought not, because if you was, you would get left. But you didn't tell me if you saw God put that lump——"

Here his mother shoved her handkerchief in his mouth and the scene was over.

The Car Driver's theory.

New York Sun.

The car driver slowed up carefully as the reporter stepped aboard, and, by various twists of the neck and divers sidelong glances, displayed a disposition to talk as the car rattled on its way down town. After going several blocks in silence he turned around suddenly and remarked, briskly:

"Oi have thim on, zur!"

"You have, eh? What are they?"

"Me wintur's socks. I'm as warrum as a babby, an' twoice as comfortable."

"I s'pose car drivers suffer on cold days?"

"Well, there's snow in bed whin Oi git left, zur. Oi 'ave struck the best thing that iver wuz. I put on a pair av cotton socks first, an' then draw the woolen ones over thim, an' yes could walk in the river all midnight, an' it stan's ter reason yeu'd niver git cowld."

"Why not?"

"Fur the raason that you couldn't. The cowld, whin it comes in through the woolen sock, stops at the outside of the cotton sock, and the warrum which goes out rom yerself through the cotton sock stops at the woolen sock. Accordingly yer fate is always warrum, and the cowld gits left, yer see."

Having relieved himself on this head, the driver turned contentedly to his horses and said nothing more.

Liquor.

Insurance Spectator.

In a short address, delivered before the Church Temperance Association of Hartford, Colonel Jacob L. Green, president of the Connecticut Mutual Life, discusses the effects of intemperance upon the vital statistics of the country. He holds that the use of intoxicating beverages, except medically, even in so-called moderation, is injurious to the system, and will show itself sooner or later in some aggravated form. He holds that even "moderate, orderly, decorous indulgence" manifests itself in congested brains, insanity, suicide, paralysis, disease of kidneys, liver and stomach, pneumonia, rheumatism, etc, and the slight disorders, whose effects should scarcely be perceptible upon a sound constitution often become in the moderate drinker, acute diseases, terminateing fatally. He argues that nothing should be taken into the stomach except such nourishment as is required to make good the waste of the mental and physical organizations, and that intoxicating stimulants do not make good such waste, but on the contrary, serve as a basis for disease. That beer drinking is harmless he declares to be a popular fallacy, and states that he has had the opportunity of observing its effects upon a beer-drinking community. In a group of selected lives, among whom beer drinking prevails, he says the history of the subjects was almost invariably the same; "Robust, apparent health, full muscles, a fair outside, increasing weight, florid faces; then a touch of cold, or a sniff of malaria, and instantly some acute disease with almost invariably, typhoid symptoms, was in violent action, and ten days or less ended it. It was as if the system had been kept fair outside while within it was eaten to a shell; and at the first touch of disease there was utter collapse; every fibre was poisoned and weak." Colonel Greene has had abundant opportunity for studying the subject, and his deductions from his observations are logical and sound. The use of intoxicating beverages is at, best, a low form of self indulgence, feeding a depraved appetite, and inevitably injuring the health and undermining the constitution of whoever yields to their seduction. Whoever reads Colonel Greene's remarks can not fail to be convinced of the truth of his statements, but whether they will make a personal application of them depends upon how reckless they may be of consequences or how thoroughly they are given over to self-indulgence.

Why Papa Weakened.

Chicago Tribune.

"But papa——"

"Not another word," said the person thus addressed—a tall, handsome man, in whose deep-brown hair a tinge of gray was just beginning to show. "You know, my child," he continued, "that nothing could give me more pain than re using any wish of yours; and I am never so happy and free from care as when some act of mine has made your life brighter. But this request I can not grant. A sealskin sacque with fur trimmings! By my halidon you jest bravely——" and turning hastily away, Dunstan Perkins stepped to the sideboard and took a drink.

For an instant Lillian stood in the conservatory, looking steadily down at the heavy velvet carpet in which her shapely feet sunk deeply, but presently the spirit of desolate loneliness seemed to leave her, and going quietly into an adjoining room she began cutting a pie.

In a few moments her father came into the apartment. "Perhaps I was rather harsh with you, Lillian," he began.

But the girl interrupted him." Don't speak of it again, dear papa," she said, "because I know that you really have no money to spare. While I was mending your overcoat, last evening, I saw that note from 'Daisy,' and I would not——"

"You saw the note?" asked Mr. Perkins in hoarse, agonized tones.

"Yes, papa; but you know I never—"

"How much will a sealskin sacque cost?"

"Three hundred dollars," and as the girl spoke these words a baleful light shot from her eyes.

"You can have the money to-morrow," he said, and went slowly out of the room.

"I thought my darling papa would weaken," said the girl, and lifting the fork slowly to her lips, the last of the pie was gone.

STATE ITEMS.

Miss Lottie Stroup, of Shelby county, has just died from a fright received forty days previous, caused by seeing her cousin, John Brent, terribly beaten in a fight with Hugh Brannan.

The commissioners of Clinton county have canceled the $38,000 tax voted the Air Line road and enjoined its collection. The railroad company will probably appeal to the Supreme Court.

Wm. Hackleman, of Anderson, placed $20 in money and a watch valued at $75 in the urn of his stove for safe keeping. Next morning, forgetting his valuables, he built a fire in the stove and destroyed his property.

A gar twelve feet long, weighing a hundred and thirty-three pounds, was taken in Hovey's Lake, Posey county, the other day—so they say. It was sent to Cynthiana, to be stuffed and placed on exhibition.

The Reaper and Mower Knife company, which has been organized at Vincennes with a capital of $1,000,000, own a patent on a reaper and mower knife, the teeth of which are in sections. Fifteen hundred of the shares are taken.

The city of Jeffersonville, through Alexander Dowling, Esq., will bring suit against the O & M. railroad to recover the sum of $200,000, subscribed by that city to the capital stock of the old Fort Wayne & Southern railroad. It is claimed the O. & M. gobbled up the track and other franchises of the Fort Wayne & Southern, and that a fraud was committed.

Joseph J. Sexon, ex-sheriff of Green county, has filed his complaint for damages against Jacob Young, a merchant of Newark, in the sum of $5,000. The complaint grows out of an article published during the late campaign in the Bloomfield News, of which Young is charged with being the author. Both are prominet democrats, and the suit will no doubt lead to further trouble.

Nelson Groendyke, a wealthy farmer, living four miles north of Connersville was suddenly confronted on his farm by a young man named Walters, who thrust a cocked revolver and a note for $600 into his face and demanded his signature or his brains. Groendyke threw up his arm and the revolver was discarged in the air. Walters then stepped back and fired at him again without hitting him, however, and then disappeared as suddenly as he came. Walters claims that Groendyke had paid him that amount less than the farm was worth.

St. Johns, N. B., had a novel funeral the other day. The deceased was a woman and six women acted as pallbearers. The ladies were dressed in black with white veils and gloves.

Mr. L. G. Matthews, formerly of the Indianapolis Sentinel, but lately contracting agent of the Ohio Falls Car Company, has accepted the appointment recently tendered him of Superintending Manager of the Pullman Car Company and its works, at a salary of $10,000 a year, and will remove to Pullman, south of Chicago.

Lucy Hooper writes from Paris that among the articles taken from the body of the late Prince Imperial was a small morocco case which he had worn upon his breast, containing the picture of the daughter of a London tradesman; and the latest romantic story concerning the Prince is that his mother sent him to Africa to prevent an imprudent marriage.

At the Coliseum Theatre, Cincinnati, Thursday afternoon, Frank Fraynn, in personating Si Slocum, in the play of the same name, shot Annie Von Behren dead while attempting to shoot an apple from her head. He fired with his back turned to the victim, and it is claimed the accident was due to a defect in the rifle. Mr. Frayne was placed under arrest.

Connor I. Jones, a hotel proprietor at Elberon, N. J., has forwarded to the auditing board a bill for $1,195.75 for entertaining the Garfield suite for fifteen days, Mrs. Garfield, Miss Mollie Garfield, Dr. Boynton, Colonel Rockwell, Mrs. Rockwell, Miss Rockwell, O. D. Rockwell, J. Standley Brown, General Swaim and Werner Young are all down on the bill for fifteen days at $4 a day.

The Troy (N. Y.) Press says that Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Hurd, of Sandgate, the oldest married couple in Bennington county, Vt., recently celebrated the seventieth anniversary of their wedding. The ages of the couple are 91 and 87 years. The house they now occupy is one in which they began housekeeping sixty-nine years ago. Two goblets, two saucers, and two spoons were upon the table which were among the wedding presents sixty-nine years ago.

DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC. PURIFIES THE BLOOD

REV. A. I. HOBBS Writes:—After a thorough trial of the IRON TONIC, I take pleasure in stating that I have been greatly benefited by its use. Ministers and Public Speakers will find it of the greatest value where a Tonic is necessary. I recommend it as a reliable remedial agent, possessing undoubted nutritive and restorative properties. Louisville, Ky., Oct. 2, 1882.

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. For Debility, Loss of Appetite, Prostration of Vital Powers it is indispensable.

REV. J. L. TOWNER, Industry, Ill., says:—"I consider it a most excellent remedy for the debilitated vital forces.
